NAZIS PAY HEAVILY FOR SMALL GAINS ON SOMME-AISNE FRONT

Roosevelt Favors Compulsory Military Training

Backs Proposal To Draft Youth As Preparedness Move by Nation

Said, also, To Favor Making 500 Army and Navy Planes Available to the Allies

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, June 7 — President Roosevelt applauded a newspaper editorial demanding compulsory military training for the United States today, while his aides joined with Henry Ford in a preliminary move toward possible mass production of warplanes on a gigantic scale.

In addition, Mr. Roosevelt asked Congress for specific authority to turn old United States army guns back to manufacturers, a procedure expected to place them quickly, if indirectly, in the hands of beleaguered French and British soldiers. Fifty navy planes are already following such a route to the Allies.

Highly placed persons said tonight that the administration plans to release, all told, more than 500 army and navy planes. These would include army attack bombers, various other models, and the fifty navy planes already disposed of.

The present plans, it was said, call for turning back to manufacturers a large amount of ordnance material, including 600,000 Lee-Enfield rifles, ammunition, and 500 or more seventy-five-millimeter guns of British and French models. The government, it was said, would receive from the manufacturers a $30,000,000 credit on later purchases of new material.

FDR for Compulsory Training

The president's moves to release the military equipment and his apparent interest in compulsory training created an immediate division of sentiment in Congress, and much debate was expected, especially if Mr. Roosevelt should propose legislation to draft the sons of thousands of households for military training.

His remark on military service was made in an offhand fashion at his regular Friday press conference. But it came so unhesitatingly in reply to the question which prompted it and was so unequivocal that many were drawn inescapably to the conclusion that the chief executive had been studying the possibilities of such a course of action.

Mr. Roosevelt was asked for comment on an editorial appearing today in the New York Times emphatically urging compulsory military training. His answer was that he had read the first paragraph and liked it very much. The paragraph in question follows:

"The time has come when in the interest of self-protection, the American people should at once adopt a national system of universal compulsory military training. We say this as a newspaper which has never believed in the wisdom of such a policy in time of peace. We say it because the logic of events drives us remorselessly to this conclusion."

Germans Pay High Price for Slight Gains on Aisne

Every German Soldier Who Crosses River is Killed by French

By The Associated Press

PARIS, June 7 —The long Allied front lines, selling every foot of scarred French ground at a fearful price in death for the invaders, backed away from furious German attacks all along the Somme front tonight at the order of General Maxime Weygand.

The generalissimo, in a communique written in his own hand, made plain that the withdrawal of advance units was to meet the double-flanking movement characteristic of the German offensive. The main, deep defensive system was still holding.

Only to that extent did he release his men from his order of the first day of the battle:

"Hold tight to the soil of France!"

German Losses Heavy

Even as they fell back, Weygand reported they had "wiped out" every German who crossed the Aisne river on the French east flank in an advance east of Soissons.

The Germans, he said, were not "counting their losses."

At the same time, Nazi tanks broke through in the far west of the front in the region of the upper Bresoe river. But the French "support positions"—net works of guns which the general had designed to

German Bombers Roar Over Eight Counties Along British Coast

Two Invading Aviators Killed When Plane Crashes; Houses Attacked with Guns

By The Associated Press

LONDON, June 8 (Saturday)—German air raiders, in the third successive night of attacks on England, roared over eight counties late last night, one circling low to machine-gun the houses of a southeast port town while another crashed and burned in East Suffolk.

The ministry of home security reported: "Two of the bomber's crew were killed and one injured. One house was badly damaged, and slight damage was caused to other buildings. No civilian casualties have been reported."

No Bombs Dropped

The machine-gunning plane which struck at the unidentified coast town dropped no bombs, but circled repeatedly close to earth. Residents escaped injury by huddling for forty-five minutes in shelters.

The alarms were in Cambridge, Norfolk, Essex, Suffolk, Kent, Northumberland, Durham and Yorkshire.

In one southeast coast county, the roar of planes was heard directly overhead, punctuated by repeated bursts of gunfire.

The planes first flew to the south, then returned, heading inward toward the west. Then they wheeled back again, pursued by the continual clatter of machine-gun fire.

In Norfolk, where the alarm lasted about an hour, compared with five minutes in Durham, deep-throated explosions were heard in the distance.

The air ministry reported almost continuous air assaults since yesterday on German communications and many other targets to hamper the Nazi drive into France.

"The three cents invested in a newspaper is one of the greatest aids to vitality we have," Yale's famous emeritus professor of English declared at Jefferson Medical College Commencement exercises.

New Income Tax Bill Is Approved By Subcommittee

Fund for Defense Will Dig Deep into Pockets of Americans

WASHINGTON, June 7. (AP)—A new tax bill, designed to raise $1,006,000,000 a year for national defense by digging deeper than ever before into the average American's pocket, won tentative approval today of a House tax subcommittee.

The new taxes would be earmarked to liquidate in the next five years a $4,000,000,000 increase in the public debt limit—form $45,000,000,000 to $49,000,000,000—which the bill would authorize in order to meet defense appropriations being made at this session. President Roosevelt already has requested approximately $4,600,000,000 for defense.

The bill would bring approximately 2,050,000 additional persons within reach of the income tax collector by reducing exemptions to the lowest level since the income tax law

Germany's Forces Keeping Schedule Berlin Announces

"STIFF RESISTANCE" FRANKLY ADMITTED

Weygand's "Surprise" Defense Reported Blocked

By The Associated Press

BERLIN, June 7—Germans at home were kept on a lean diet of war news tonight from the battle line.

The high command, claiming only "progress on schedule," acknowledged it was meeting "stiff resistance" from heavier arms than had been expected.

Cheered by army statements that "Weygand's surprise," France's resiliant defense of depth, had been "broken on a front sixty-two miles wide," the populace waited at radios for bulletins that might tell the speed of the march toward Paris.

Accustomed to graphic, detailed communiques during the sweep across the low countries, Germans had to content themselves with a few terse announcements which made no claims of towns taken.

Maginot Line Weakened

But from the press and other informed sources the word spread that:

Germany's oil reserve, increased from a six-month supply at the outbreak of war to enough to last eight months, is only now being touched.

Preparedness of State Explained To Gov. O'Conor

Chief Executive Gets Views of Major General Reckord

Baltimore, June 7, (AP) — Governor O'Conor disclosed today he had requested and received from Maj. Gen. Milton A. Reckord, state national guard commander, "a complete picture" of Maryland's preparedness—or lack of it—to face a national emergency.

Declining to discuss details of the survey, which he said was completed prior to the governor's conference from which he had just returned, O'Conor explained it covered national guard, naval militia and aviation units.

Particular emphasis was placed on potential manpower and equipment, he added.

National defnese was a major discussion topic at the governors' meeting in Duluth, Governor O'Conor pointed out, and some of the information was used there.

O'Conor was one of five state executives appointed to an executive committee which will function as liaison between state and federal governments in pressing the national defense program. A meeting of the committee is scheduled soon, he said, possibly within the next few days.

The governor said he had "not yet" ordered special precautions regarding national guard armories and equipment. In several states, the armories have been closed to the public and a twenty-four-hour guard placed on equipment.

"I am holding off definite action on Maryland's national defense activities pending advice from the federal government as to what it expects from us," he said. "After the meeting of the executive committee, we expect to have a better picture of the situation."

French Advance Forces Fall Back under Orders, But Hold Main Positions

Weygand Strategy Lets Germans Across River only To Be Wiped Out by Defenders; French Drop 100 Tons of Bombs on Tanks, Convoys and Communication Lines of Onrushing Invaders

By The Associated Press

Allied soldiers poured out a withering fire as they clung fast to their main defense positions on the 125-mile Aisne-Somme front last (Friday) night after advance forces had fallen back, under orders, from the crushing German drive into France.

While the fighting reddened the sky over the continent, England's third night of air raids was spiced with a shower of machine-gun bullets which a Nazi flier chattered into roofs and buildings at a Southeast port not otherwise identified. Residents huddled in shelters and cellars for forty-five minutes and escaped the deadly spray.

A German bomber crashed in East Suffolk and one prisoner was reported taken. Air raid alarms shrieked in eight of England's shires.

Statement from Weygand

Generalissimo Maxime Weygand wrote a communique in his own hand to make it clear his advance units backed up in a strategic movement to meet a typical Nazi double-flanking push.

East of Soissons, sixty miles from Paris, German advance forces hurled themselves across the Aisne river only to be "wiped out," said the French high command.

Heedless of terrific losses, Nazi attackers pressed their attack all along the front in the third night of the bloody battle of France.

The French explained the advance units fell back after "fulfilling their mission" against enemy tanks and infantry. Defenders were described as falling back under orders.

Frech resistance, carried out "with bravery," followed the command of Generalissimo Maxime Weygand to "hold tight to the soil of France."

Drop 100 Tons of Bombs

During the third day of the great battle the French said their aviation carried out "incessant" attacks, dropping 100 tons of bombs on "armored machines, convoys and communication lines."

German armies, pounding violently at the center of the tough French defenses of the Somme-Aisne front, were trying to make the broad valley of the Oise river a Nazi highway to Paris.

The later attack came north of Soissons.

Another came on the Aisne river, east and north of Soissons, which is the French right flank in that sector.

Nazi Panzer units broke into the French lines in the west toward the upper Bresle river, but there they were met with a hot fire from Weygand "support points," designed to trap such units.

Decision in Doubt

These points in the west were reported holding fast.

On the third night of the thunderous battle of France the heavens again were red with the glare of battle all along the great front from the Aisne to the sea.

A decisive trend still was not evident.

The Germans still had the strength to attack powerfully. The French, inspired by defense of their own soid, fought back as hard as ever.

Nazi forces had scored two advances, one of about 7½ miles from the Somme to the Bresle on the west wing, and another of about six miles from the Ailette to the Aisne on the east wing.

The center of the Weygand line still was holding fast.

Italy More Warlike

Italy, in a move that might mean she was on the verge of war, was reported to have cancelled sailings of Italian ships, including that of the liner Rex, due to leave for the United States June 12.

The Italian line continued to accept reservations for the scheduled departure of the Rex.

There was no confirmation for reports that Italian merchantmen had been advised to hurry to neutral harbors.

It was considered significant that the German high command made No specific claims to advances, but in unusually terse communiques to the German people, spoke of "progress on schedule" despite "stiff resistance" from more and heavier

Draft Acts Explained by Walsh To Eastern University Class

Baltimore, June 7. (AP)—Attorney General William C. Walsh aimed a few legal shots tonight at what he described as "confused ideas" of some citizens as to their duties and responsibilities in war-time.

Regardless of personal feelings in the matter, and regardless of "I-don't-fight" resolutions adopted by youth groups, he told the Eastern University graduating class, the nation's draft acts determine definitely all liability to military service.

"These draft acts have been before the Supreme Court in a number of cases," the Attorney General said, "and the court has established the rule that unless an individual or class of persons is exempted in the law, their own objections, whether conscientious or not, will not justify their refusing to serve.

"Anyone who does refuse violates the law of the land."

"I mention these matters not as an indication that I think we are about to engage in a war, because I do not think we are, but I mention them so that you will know what is the correct rule about military service, and I think it is appropriate because in preparing this country against any possible attack, it will be necessary for many citizens to voluntarily join the military service or for the government to require them to do so."

Dewey Urges Sound Course in All Plans for Defense of U. S.

New Yorker Delivers His First Address to West Virginians

CHARLESTON, W. Va., June 7 (AP) —Thomas E. Dewey, eyeing the government's defense moves, declared tonight public opinion had sidetracked partisan control of America's preparedness but there must continue a close watch to "hold the national administration to a sound course."

In his first campaign address to West Virginians, the Republican presidential aspirant declared that since the start of the defense emergency the administration has demonstrated a "temperamental inability to follow a straight road toward a national goal."

"It has preferred to dwadle along," Dewey said, "picking political daisies until prodded from behind by public opinion.

"The whole course of the preparedness program is a triumph for alert and intelligent public opinion. The New Deal has reluctantly retreated day by day from its objective of complete partisan control.

"It has at least promised to permit competent men to do the job that has to be done."

The New York district attorney was referring to the appointment of industrial leaders on the advisory commission for national defense, created May 28 and on May 31 made responsible to the president alone.

Dewey Describes Board

In an interview shortly after his arrival in Charleston, Dewey described the board as composed of "three industrialists," whose ability he did not question, and "four ardent third termers" who follow a political philosophy which has failed to demonstrate its ability to manage production.

Dewey, accompanied by Mrs. Dewey, spent the day in Charleston conferring with West Virginia Republican leaders who were here for organization of the state executive committee and for a meeting of the national convention delegation.

The New Yorker left tonight for Winston-Salem, N. C., where he said he would "discuss with outspoken frankness what the whole country faces and what the president hasn't had the courage to tell the country."

University of Maryland To Train 60 Student Fliers During Summer

COLLEGE PARK, Md., June 7 (AP) —The University of Maryland will offer free instruction to student flyers this summer under the Civil Aeronautics Authority's program to train civilian pilots.

Dean S. S. Steinberg announced the quota for the summer sessions would be sixty students, who must be between eighteen and twenty-five and at least Sophomores in college. Students from any school will be accepted, provided they meet the requirements, and preference will be given to this year's graduates.

The government will pay all costs of the training, amounting to about $400 per student.

Dr. John E. Younger, head of the Aeronautical Engineering course at the University, will be in charge.

Ten per cent of the quota of sixty students may be women. No military obligation is attached to the course, which includes seventy-two hours of ground instruction and thirty-five to fifty hours of flight instruction. The courses will open June 15 and end about Sept. 15.

The ground courses will be conducted at the university and the actual flight training will be held at the College Park airport.

Instructors will be Lieut. George Hannah, Maryland National Guard; Comdr. Charles G. Halpine, U.S.N., and George Brinkerhoff, operator of the College Park airport.

Maryland made a 100 per cent record in the courses begun last fall and was the only school in the South Atlantic region to have a perfect record. Of the forty-seven students who took the course, everyone was qualified and received a pilot's certificate of competence.

COLLEGE PARK, Md., June 7 (AP) —The University of Maryland will offer free instruction to student flyers this summer under the Civil Aeronautics Authority's program to train civilian pilots.

Dean S. S. Steinberg announced the quota for the summer sessions would be sixty students, who must be between eighteen and twenty-five and at least Sophomores in college. Students from any school will be accepted, provided they meet the requirements, and preference will be given to this year's graduates.

The government will pay all costs of the training, amounting to about $400 per student.

Dr. John E. Younger, head of the Aeronautical Engineering course at the University, will be in charge.

Ten per cent of the quota of sixty students may be women. No military obligation is attached to the course, which includes seventy-two hours of ground instruction and thirty-five to fifty hours of flight instruction. The courses will open June 15 and end about Sept. 15.

The ground courses will be conducted at the university and the actual flight training will be held at the College Park airport.

Instructors will be Lieut. George Hannah, Maryland National Guard; Comdr. Charles G. Halpine, U.S.N., and George Brinkerhoff, operator of the College Park airport.

Maryland made a 100 per cent record in the courses begun last fall and was the only school in the South Atlantic region to have a perfect record. Of the forty-seven students who took the course, everyone was qualified and received a pilot's certificate of competence.

raft Acts Explained by Walsh To Eastern University Class

altimore, June 7. (AP)—Attorney eral William C. Walsh aimed a legal shots tonight at what he cribed as "confused ideas" of e citizens as to their duties and onsibilities in war-time.

egardless of personal feelings in matter, and regardless of "I-t-fight" resolutions adopted by th groups, he told the Eastern versity graduating class, the na-'s draft acts determine definite-ll liability to military service.

These draft acts have been be-the Supreme Court in a num-of cases," the Attorney Gen-said, "and the court has estab-ed the rule that unless an in-dual or class of persons is ex-empted in the law, their own objections, whether conscientious or not, will not justify their refusing to serve.

"Anyone who does refuse violates the law of the land."

"I mention these matters not as an indication that I think we are about to engage in a war, because I do not think we are, but I mention them so that you will know what is the correct rule about military service, and I think it is appropriate because in preparing this country against any possible attack, it will be necessary for many citizens to voluntarily join the military service or for the government to require them to do so."

Italy Sends All Ships into Ports To Avoid Capture

Sudden Action Believed To Indicate Early Entrance in War

By The Associated Press

Rome, June 7—Italy made the world aware tonight that her hour of decision is near by holding her ships at a world standstill and by putting her armies to the ready.

Italians heard without surprise the widespread reports abroad that the scheduled sailings of all Italian merchant ships had been cancelled and that those in foreign waters had been ordered to take cover in neutral harbors.

While there was no official confirmation here of these reports, a reliable source said the great Italian liner Rex would not sail on June 12, despite that the line still accepted reservations.

Other departures likewise were reported secretly called off.

Armament was speeded. The Italian air force was granted $380,000,000 for its expanded program in the next three years. The navy got $80,000,000 for armament aboard and ashore.

DeBono Heads Armies

A 74-year old whiskered veteran of many a tough colonial campaign, Marshal Emilio DeBono, was put in command of Italy's southern armies — the forces which would be expected to do much of the fighting upon Italy's entrance into the war.

Military experts believed that Marshal DeBono's new command included the troops of Libya—from which some Fascists have openly predicted a campaign against Egypt in an effort to capture the Suez Canal, an essential to the maintenance of the British lifeline.

The announcement of the marshal's elevation spoke of a "group." There has been but one army in southern Italy and two in Libya. Thus, it was said, the three might be formed into a single force.

Italy, Russia More Friendly

Among the day's significant developments was the fact that foreign circles were told that diplomatic relations between Italy and Russia—who has understandings with Germany—were being improved.

Italian Ambassador Augusto Rosso is expected to return to Moscow, which he left several months ago after Josef Stalin recalled the new Soviet Ambassador Nicolai Gorelchin from Rome because of hostile demonstrations over the Russian invasion of Finland. Gorelchin's return to Rome shortly was predicted.

As to French Premier Reynaud's gesture toward peace with the Italians, one newspaper—Il Resto Del Carlino of Bologna—declared that the first essential would be for France to make an immediate peace with Hitler, and then—:

Harsh Terms Suggested

Restore Germany's pre-war colonies; pay Germany for her war expense; give Corsica, Nice, Savoy, Tunisia and Jibuti to Italy — and pay her too, for the cost of her own military operations.

Blackout restrictions were being enforced strictly; two special trains stood in the Rome yards ready to take the British and French diplomatic staffs to the border; three trains painted with the emblem of the Red Cross stood there, too.

Minefields were down in a twelve-mile zone all along the long Italian coastline.

Backs Proposal

ment announced that, at Ford's request, a pursuit plane of the latest type would be flown to the Ford airport on Monday, with an engineer to explain it to Ford and the men of his own engineering department.

Ford recently said that if free from governmental interference he could produce 1,000 planes of standard type daily, in about six months. This he followed up with a request to the war department that it send him a plane of the type most needed. He also sent assurances of his support for the national defense program.

Following up yesterday's disclosure that fifty naval planes would be turned back to the manufacturer—with the latter free to sell them at once to the Allies—Mr. Roosevelt today asked for authority to turn back left-over World war stocks of guns.

Legal power already exists to follow such a course with planes and ammunition, Mr. Roosevelt said, but guns are in a different status. Under the existing statutes, he said, the money realized by the government on the guns would have to be turned into the general fund of the treasury.

Disposition of Funds

By contrast, it is the president's plan to have these sums left as credit to be applied later to purchases of up-to-date equipment, replacing the material sold. Once in the treasury, the money could be made available for replacement purposes only by a congressional appropriation.

Mr. Roosevelt emphasized that only old equipment would be disposed of, but he added in a significant tone that an airplane grows old darned fast. Even recently delivered planes are already obsolete, he said, because they lack armor, and gasoline tanks which automatically seal themselves when pierced by an enemy bullet.

THE GERMAN PLAN---A PINCER ATTACK

INTERPRETING THE WAR NEWS

By KIRKE L. SIMPSON
Associated Press Staff Writer

France's hopes that the Weygand web, woven fifty miles deep across France from the English channel to the Oise-Aisne plateau, will save her find much encouragement in two factors:

(1) Berlin battle communiques, after three days of smashing attack, remained strangely terse and uncommunicative. They claimed sweeping general advances "on schedule," but gave no details.

(2) Backing up that intimation that German thrusts thus far have produced only punctures, not blow-outs, in the Weygand web, was Paris' claim that the French are still standing fast along the Peronne bulge of the Somme front. A German break-through of serious proportions either on the channel flank to the west, or eastward of the Oise valley on the Aisne-Aillette sector, could compel prompt evacuation of the Peronne bulge.

Nevertheless, the situation remains critical for the French on both menaced flanks. This is reflected in Generalissimo Weygand's battle order to his troops to fight looking forward only. Nor can France avoid turning her eyes from that boiling 200-mile cauldron north and west of Paris to glance apprehensively over her right shoulder to where Italy stands poised for a plunge into the war.

Italian Plans Secret

The first shock of battle may come on that Mediterranean front at any moment. But it is not clear, perhaps even to Berlin, just where and how Italy will strike—if she does. There are circumstances about Italian hesitancy over taking the final plunge which imply that Il Duce has plans wholly his own, unshared with his German axis mate, for exploiting the plight of France and Britain.

A Berlin report that Rome is awaiting final assurance that France's airforce has been removed by German action does not cast Mussolini in a flattering role in German eyes. Nor can it be seriously doubted that Italy's first consideration as a belligerent, wherever and however she strikes, must be the Anglo-French naval perponderance in the Mediterranean.

That suggests that any air aid Italy might render Germany by attacks on the French Mediterranean coast or in the Rhone valley would be limited. The primary mission of the Italian airforce and Italy's huge fleet of submarines must be to locate and attack French and British sea forces. Unless they can be eliminated, Italian hopes of breaking the Gibraltar and Suez canal shackles on her economic aspirations must go unrewarded, even if France finally succumbs to the German onslaught or is driven back behind her Marne-Paris-Seine lines of defense.

British Expect Attack

There can be no doubt that British defenders of Malta are keyed to expect momentarily the roar of Italian air attack. It is there that Italy's first stroke could be expected to fall if she is planning a campaign to dominate the Mediterranean, seize French Tunisia and Corsica, or even if, against German interests, she moves to set the Balkans also aflame with war.

Such speculation as to Italy's real objective if she takes the war plunge tend to reduce French fears that any great part of the Italian air force will be thrown into the scales against her.

The rigid censorship in Paris and Berlin on details of the fighting in France makes it difficult to discern the actual battle line. Unless there have been German penetrations unreported as this is written, however, the Weygand web still is stoutly guarding the Oise valley gateway to Paris and the heart of France.

Dewey Urges

Views On Rearmament

"Here in America precious time has been lost. We cannot rely upon the hope that our administration will muddle through. Our national responsibility must not be left in the hands of our Chamberlains. America must have an administrative organization in Washington competent to carry out our national defense program swiftly and surely. x x x

"Since the crisis has become acute the administration has fumbled with national defense just as it fumbled for seven years with national recovery.

"Today we face the tremendous task of expanding our industrial production to meet the needs of national defense. We face this task with our national finances seriously strained and an industrial system that has been systematically sabotaged by government policy.

"The country now knows sorely we need the industrial capacity which we might have had, if the New Deal had not bound and gagged the forces of expansion."

The New York campaigner, who has the promised support of at least four of the mountain state's sixteen-man convention delegation, charged that from the first the nation realized the administration was "utterly unfitted to the task that has been thrust upon it."

Inexperienced Cabinet

The cabinet is almost entirely without industrial experience, he asserted. When President Roosevelt announced he would call experts to Washington, there was no indication they would have power to carry out defense plans, he added.

It was not until public opinion made itself felt that the New Deal "grudgingly" gave in, Dewey said, and made the advisory commission responsible to the president, instead of the cabinet.

Dewey accused Mr. Roosevelt of "subterfuge" in his fireside chat of May 16. The president listed armaments and munitions "on hand and on order," Dewey said, but the most of it was "on order."

"At a time when the country wanted to hear the cold truth about our preparedness," Dewey told the crowd, "it received from its president only deceptive statements about equipment 'on hand and on order'. Equipment 'on order' is no equipment. An anti-aircraft gun 'on order' will not bring down a bombing plane an enemy has 'on hand.'

German Bombers

status on French battlefields as "pretty good" but wondered whether the main attack of the Germans yet had been made.

25 Planes Downed

The loss of ten British planes was acknowledged, but the ministry declared fifteen German aircraft had been shot down. British bombing targets such as railways, bridges, troops, gun emplacements, tank columns and oil refineries were "systematically and repeatedly bombed" behind the Somme front, in France and in northwest Germany.

The British reported they dropped seventy bombs on a big refinery south of Hamburg, setting great fires there and also on a large oil storage plant near Delmenhorst.

Their high explosive bombs smashed one end of a tunnel south of Aachen, blocking the main railway.

The British raiders also ranged the full length of the German lines and behind the lines in northern France, setting new fires at a previously-bombed oil depot at Ghent, plowing into German-held airdromes and Arras and Norderney, and slashing at rail lines, marching troops and columns of trucks.

Air raid warnings were sounded in two towns near England's east coast tonight.

An air raid warning also was sounded in Kent, east of London.

Civil Workers Needed

Sir John Anderson, minister of home defense, issued a call for thousands of civil workers and in a nationwide broadcast asked everyone in Britain to "learn the rules of air raid precautions."

The minister called for volunteer police, fire, air raid precaution workers and nurses to register immediately.

He said its powers under the defense act enabled the government to compel the nation's subjects to participate in such work but that he believed it should be voluntary.

During the day planes believed to be German reconnaissance craft scouted Surrey. Britons got ready to give a hot reception to any bombers which might follow the scouts during the night.

To guard against a night invasion by sea the admiralty established a three-mile curfew zone all around the United Kingdom. All ships were forbidden to enter that zone between sunset and sunrise except in organized convoys.

Plane Production Gaining

Lord Beaverbrook, minister of aircraft, declared that Britain had made giant strides in plane production in her effort to offset Nazi numerical superiority in the air.

Previously Britain had declared she shot down four for every British plane lost in Flanders. Lord Beaverbrook declared she had kept ahead of her losses.

Germany's air force was estimated by Beaverbrook at 11,675 planes, of which two-fifths were front line or combat craft. He said the Reich had 16,000 pilots, of whom 12,000 had recent training.

As air raids became more numerous the U. S. embassy urged all Americans who do not have urgent reasons for staying in England to return to the United States aboard the liner Washington leaving Galway, Ireland, about the middle of June.

The embassy warned that this might be their last opportunity to go home until after the war.

French Advance

guns than they had expected in the new Weygand line.

The army called the line "Weygand's surprise" and declared it had ben "broken on a front sixty-two miles wide."

While the German populace waited for radio announcements of the progress of the Nazi armies the press and other informed sources spread various reports of Germany's strength and favorable position in the war.

Nazi Oil Reserve High

The German oil reserve, it was said, has risen from a six-month supply at the beginning of the war to an eight-month supply now.

In Germany, Italy's plunge into the war was explained to be contingent on destruction of the French air force and a siege of Paris which would pull away French manpower from drives France might make at Italian possessions.

While British war industries ran at top speed to supply equipment and munitions for new divisions and to replace that lost in Flanders, the Royal Air Force vigorously entered the battle of the Somme to hold up Britain's share of the fight.

The British air ministry declared its fliers in constant action over the Somme front and in Germany.

As her own fliers winged back and forth from England to the battle-front, Britain strengthened her air raid defenses in expectation of the third successive night of raids.

Egypt, busy with preparations for war in the Mediterranean apparently was not impressed by a newspaper report that Italy had promised Egyptian frontiers would be respected if Italy goes to war against the Allies.

The report was made by the newspaper Al Bassir.

Premier Aly Maher Pasha countered the report with the assertion that Egypt was doing all possible to guard against a surprise attack and that the nation would fulfill every obligation under her alliance with Great Britain.

Ford May Build Planes

The United States, busy with its own great defense program, made a preliminary move toward possible production of warplanes on a vast scale.

A war department announcement said a pursuit plane of the latest type would be flown to Detroit where an engineer would explain it to Henry Ford's engineers. Recently Ford said that if he were free of government interference he could produce 1,000 planes of a standard type daily, within six months.

President Roosevelt applauded a newspaper editorial urging compulsory military training in the United States and asked Congress for authority to turn old army guns back to manufacturers, a move that would get them quickly into the hands of British and French soldiers.

The president's unhesitating remarks on compulsory military training gave observers the conviction that he had been studying the matter.

House Passes Wagner Act Changes, But Senate Pigeonhole May Follow

WASHINGTON, June 7 (AP)—By a vote of exactly two to one, the House passed and sent to the Senate today a series of Wagner act amendments to create a new, three-man National Labor Relations Board and make sweeping changes in its present procedure.

The same coalition of Republicans and Democrats which had held the upper hand for three days of preliminary fighting rolled up a 258 to 129 vote for the revisions, despite the fact that all factions agreed that they would wind up in a pigeonhole in the Senate.

The amendments were virtually the same as those approved by a majority of the five-man committee headed by Representative Smith (D-Va) which has been investigating the Wagner act and the Labor Board since last December.

Change in Function

Besides abolishing the positions now held by labor board members J Warren Madden, Edwin S. Smith and William M. Leiserson, the Smith amendments would separate the board's present administrative and judicial functions by establishing the position of an administrator. Sponsors said this procedure would leave the new board free to concentrate its attention on judicial functions.

The amendments also would abolish the economics division now headed by David J. Saposs; would permit court review of board decisions in representation cases and would require the board to acknowledge craft unions as bargaining agents if a majority of the members of such unions so desired.

Minority Fights Hard

Opposing these propositions at every turn, a minority tried in vain to confine the House amendments to a series of four, approved by the House Labo. Committee and built around the addition of two new members to the three-man board.

But this group was beaten, once on a teller vote of 178 to 111 and on roll call votes of 246 to 137 and 258 to 129.

Only five changes were made in the original Smith bill—four of them recommended by President William Green of the American Federation of Labor.

The fifth—by Rep. Allen (D-Pa)—would relieve employers of requirement that they bargain with labor representatives who are not citizens of the United States.

Germans Pay

cut them down with crossfire—were holding firm.

The day's action along the 125-mile front of the Somme and Aisne thus saw heavy action at both ends, and also at Weygand's strongly defended center.

But with their tanks bogging down in the swamps of the Bresle valley, the German main push appeared tonight to be concentrated on the east flank.

On the sides of Soissons to the north and east Nazi forces poured down from the Aillette, massing along the Aisne for continuing attacks.

The effort to cross the Aisne—in an area about sixty miles from Paris—was choked off in one of the day's most violent battles.

An artillery bombardment ushered it in, but those who bridged the river did so only to die on the left bank.

The center of the front was no less ablaze. There, the war ministry spokesman announced, the Germans were attacking heavily tonight, with tanks and new waves of infantrymen.

The center blow was sprung from the Ois valley, north of Soissons, an old battleground.

Bag Many More Tanks

In the whole battle area, where half a million Nazis were on the charge, the French reported cutting down many more German tanks than the 400 already declared to have been smashed in traps. The dive bombers, so active in the German successes in the north, were fewer, too, today.

The French used cannon-carrying airplanes to pound the tanks from above.

In this third day of the battle of France, as Weygand has chosen to call it, the Reichswehr used forty divisions of infantry to fold back the flanks of the French and try to take the Weygand line from the rear.

Tonight Weygand's center remained intact.

The Germans used two Panzer divisions, or 1,000 tanks, in the Peronne sector alone yesterday in trying to break into the Oise valley which leads south to Paris.

Weather Favors Hitler

They failed to open a breach in the French line of support points, however.

For the twenty-ninth successive day of the campaign on the western front and the third day of this battle the weather favored Hitler. It was clear and hot and there was no sign tonight of a break.

The Germans were estimated to have another 2,000 tanks in reserve, with their total force originally 4,000, waiting to drive through any gap in the French lines.

But with Weygand himself at the front, the French troops were carrying out orders to stick to support posts to the end, raining artillery and anti-tank gun fire on the tanks from all sides, while planes bombed and shelled them from above.

Besides directing the battle in person, Weygand is writing the two daily communiques himself.

His order for the first day of the battle, telling his men to "look only forward" and "hold tight to the soil of France," was published today.

He has adapted his army, once hailed as the best in the old world, to defend against Germany's new mechanized warfare, and he has shown that the Reichswehr's rush can be checked.

Back of his deep Somme-Aisne line, itself a quagmire of staggered support points to trap and smash the German tanks, Weygand has sown the fifty-mile-deep area clear to the Seine with anti-tank defense nests.

The roads are barricaded and there are strong support points armed both with anti-tank guns and machine-guns.

Garbage Trucks Mobilized

Even in Paris the garbage trucks are mobile machine-gun units now, strategic gates of the city are barricaded and there are steel anti-parachutist posts in the beautiful Champs Elysees.

While the battle of France went on in all its fury, the Germans sent 200 planes today into central France.

They passed around Paris while air raid sirens howled, then flew on south. An official announcement, later, said they did "material damage" in an unspecified central section.

Paris itself lies within seventy miles of the battle zone.

The active battle zone stretches from the channel to the war-trampled ridges of the Chemin-Des-Dames between the Aillette and the Aisne rivers, some 125 miles in all.

France's government maintained its confidence.

Germany's Forces

blow at Italian overseas possessions.

Meanwhile confidence grew that the conquest of Paris is but a matter of days.

Nazi newspapers stressed that France now fights alone—with the German punch toward Le Havre intended to separate finally the French and British fighting forces.

Then would come what the press has termed "settlement with England."

All French Troops in Action

One newspaper said "France fights x x x without the possibility of strategic tactical utilization of the Maginot line. Weygand x x x has thrown all available troops and materials into the Somme-Aisne defenses to oppose the German attack as long as possible."

It added:

"His preparations on these historic rivers can hardly hold off the Germans with countless new divisions after the Germans already have broken through the line on a front sixty-two miles wide."

High army sources disclosed, however, that France's swiftly-devised defense system made the going hard and gave the Reich's blitzkrieg machine a "real problem."

Heavy artillery fire and an ingenious use of natural obstacles to make every gulley a trench, every clump of trees a fort, were combined in France's stubborn defense of every inch of the homeland soil.

The French, it was admitted, were not caught napping by the drive south.

Gains ranging from twelve to eighteen miles were claimed in the second day of assault, with further advances the third day that were not described in detail or extent.

Heaviest fighting was in the push south from Abbeville to positions near the Bresle river on the hard-fought way toward Le Havre, and toward Paris down the arrowhead formed by the Aisne and Oise rivers.

Raiders Driven Off

The Germans reported driving off with anti-aircraft fire a British raid over Hamburg, Germany's principal port. Bombs were said to have fallen in a field at the edge of town.

Again the German air force struck blows of its own.

Returning bomber crews told of blasting airports from which British airmen operate in western France, and starting huge fires with explosives hurled at the big French port of Cherbourg.

The air ministry reported "big conflagrations and explosions were observed on the quays and piers" at Cherbourg and heavy damage was caused to airdromes in eastern and central France.

Raids on the British air force were described as paving the way for the crushing of England.

The commander of a German destroyer said the Nazi outpost at the iron ore port of Narvik, Norway, completely wrecked the harbor facilities before the city fell to Germans, he said, had few losses.

General Weygand Directing Battle

NEW YORK, June 8—(Saturday) (AP)—A British radio report, picked up by CBS early today, quoted a member of the French war ministry as saying that Allied Generalissimo Maxime Weygand had gone to the Somme front from Paris and was "directing personally the continuation of the battle."

Alice Faye Recovering

New Income Tax

was enacted. The basic exemption for married couples would be cut from $2,500 to $2,000 and for single persons from $1,000 to $800.

Provides Supertax

In addition, the measure would impose a supertax of ten percent of the normal tax for the next five years; increase surtax rates on the income brackets between $6,000 and $100,000 and boost corporation income taxes by one percent of taxable income.

Persons not affected by the income tax increases will be reached for part of the defense costs through increases of ten percent or more which the bill would impose on virtually all existing excuse tax levies, such as the tax on gasoline. The latter is tentatively scheduled to go up a half cent from the present one cent levy.

Chairman Cooper (D-Tenn), who said the bill was unanimously approved by his subcommittee, told newsmen that the lowering of income tax exemptions was intended to be permanent law, as was the imposition of the higher surtaxes.

All the increases would apply to 1940 incomes on which taxes will be due next March 15.

The ten percent supertax would apply, however, only to the five years beginning with 1940.

Explains Increases

As an illustration of the effect of the increases, Cooper said that under existing law, a married man with no dependents and a $3,000 net earned income pays $8. Under the proposed rates he would pay $30.80.

Under existing law, this taxpayer would get a $2,500 exemption because of his married status, plus a further deduction of ten percent of his earned income. This would bring his taxable income down to $200. The government would collect four percent of this, or $8. Under the proposed law, he would get a $2,000 exemption for being married, plus the ten percent deduction for earned income. Therefore, his taxable income would be $700. Four percent of this would be $28. To this would be added the supertax of ten percent of $28, or $2.80. Thus the total tax bill would be $30.80.

Cooper explained that the ten percent supertax is computed on the basis of the amount of tax due under the higher rates and is added to that total.

Authority of State Magistrates Defined

BALTIMORE, June 7 (AP)—Magistrates who actually witness law violations are empowered to make arrests without showing official credentials, the state law department held today.

Deputy Attorney General William L. Henderson, in an opinion written for Louis M. Leimbach, Howard county trial magistrate, noted however that, in such cases, the arresting magistrate must inform the offender "of your official position"

When a magistrate makes an arrest, the opinion continued, "the Court of Appeals has said that it ought to appear that at the time of the arrest he acted and professed to act in his official capacity and he ought to notify the party arrested of such a fact."

"Such justice should not attempt to try the case himself," the ruling noted.

Leimbach also asked if a trial magistrate had authority to impose a fine less than the minimum imposed by statute. Henderson advised him that magistrates lacked such power.

Flint's counsel, however, scribed Col. Nicholson as a "lon old man" who turned to Flight the friendship and companionsh he craved.

Italy Sends All Ships into Ports To Avoid Capture

Sudden Action Believed To Indicate Early Entrance in War

By The Associated Press

Rome, June 7—Italy made the world aware tonight that her hour of decision is near by holding her ships at a world standstill and by putting her armies to the ready.

Italians heard without surprise the widespread reports abroad that the scheduled sailings of all Italian merchant ships had been cancelled and that those in foreign waters had been ordered to take cover in neutral harbors.

While there was no official confirmation here of these reports, a reliable source said the great Italian liner Rex would not sail on June 12, despite that the line still accepted reservations.

Other departures likewise were reported secretly called off.

Armament was speeded. The Italian air force was granted $380,000,000 for its expanded program in the next three years. The navy got $80,000,000 for armament aboard and ashore.

DeBono Heads Armies

A 74-year old whiskered veteran of many a tough colonial campaign, Marshal Emilio DeBono, was put in command of Italy's southern armies — the forces which would be expected to do much of the fighting upon Italy's entrance into the war.

Military experts believed that Marshal DeBono's new command included the troops of Libya—from which some Fascists have openly predicted a campaign against Egypt in an effort to capture the Suez Canal, an essential to the maintenance of the British lifeline.

The announcement of the marshal's elevation spoke of a "group." There has been but one army in southern Italy and two in Libya. Thus, it was said, the three might be formed into a single force.

Italy, Russia More Friendly

Among the day's significant developments was the fact that foreign circles were told that diplomatic relations between Italy and Russia—who has understandings with Germany—were being improved.

Italian Ambassador Augusto Rosso is expected to return to Moscow, which he left several months ago after Josef Stalin recalled the new Soviet Ambassador Nicolai Gorelchin from Rome because of hostile demonstrations over the Russian invasion of Finland. Gorelchin's return to Rome shortly was predicted.

As to French Premier Reynaud's gesture toward peace with the Italians, one newspaper—Il Resto Del Carlino of Bologna—declared that the first essential would be for France to make an immediate peace with Hitler, and then—:

Harsh Terms Suggested

Restore Germany's pre-war colonies; pay Germany for her war expense; give Corsica, Nice, Savoy, Tunisia and Jibuti to Italy — and pay her too, for the cost of her own military operations.

Blackout restrictions were being enforced strictly; two special trains stood in the Rome yards ready to take the British and French diplomatic staffs to the border; three trains painted with the emblem of the Red Cross stood there, too.

Minefields were down in a twelve-mile zone all along the long Italian coastline.

Backs Proposal

ment announced that, at Ford's request, a pursuit plane of the latest type would be flown to the Ford airport on Monday, with an engineer to explain it to Ford and the men of his own engineering department.

Ford recently said that if free from governmental interference he could produce 1,000 planes of standard type daily, in about six months. This he followed up with a request to the war department that it send him a plane of the type most needed. He also sent assurances of his support for the national defense program.

Following up yesterday's disclosure that fifty naval planes would be turned back to the manufacturer—with the latter free to sell them at once to the Allies—Mr. Roosevelt today asked for authority to turn back left-over World war stocks of guns.

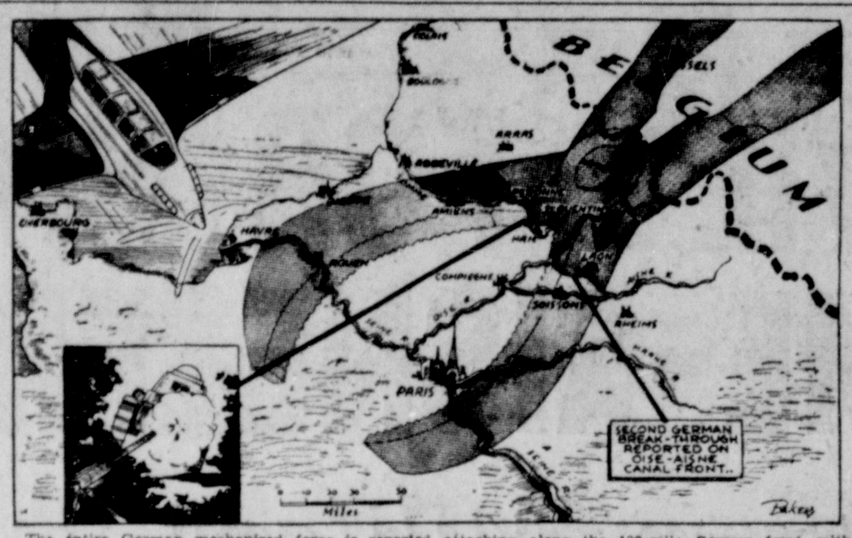
Legal power already exists to follow such a course with planes and ammunition, Mr. Roosevelt said, but guns are in a different status. Under the existing statutes, he said, the money realized by the government on the guns would have to be turned into the general fund of the treasury.

Disposition of Funds

By contrast, it is the president's plan to have these sums left as credit to be applied later to purchases of up-to-date equipment, replacing the material sold. Once in the treasury, the money could be made available for replacement purposes only by a congressional appropriation.

Mr. Roosevelt emphasized that only old equipment would be disposed of, but he added in a significant tone that an airplane grows old darned fast. Even recently delivered planes are already obsolete, he said, because they lack armor, and gasoline tanks which automatically seal themselves when pierced by an enemy bullet.

THE GERMAN PLAN---A PINCER ATTACK



The entire German mechanized force is reported attacking along the 120-mile Somme front, with Paris the objective, in a great pincer movement. The black arrows on the map indicate points where Nazis are reported striking with hammer blows. The French are using their famous 75's to blast Nazi tanks in the spearheads aimed at the capital.

INTERPRETING THE WAR NEWS

By KIRKE L. SIMPSON
Associated Press Staff Writer

France's hopes that the Weygand web, woven fifty miles deep across France from the English channel to the Oise-Aisne plateau, will save her find much encouragement in two factors:

(1) Berlin battle communiques, after three days of smashing attack, remained strangely terse and uncommunicative. They claimed sweeping general advances "on schedule," but gave no details.

(2) Backing up that intimation that German thrusts thus far have produced only punctures, not blow-outs, in the Weygand web, was Paris' claim that the French are still standing fast along the Peronne bulge of the Somme front. A German break-through of serious proportions either on the channel flank to the west, or eastward of the Oise valley on the Aisne-Ailette sector, could compel prompt evacuation of the Peronne bulge.

Nevertheless, the situation remains critical for the French on both menaced flanks. This is reflected in Generalissimo Weygand's battle order to his troops to fight looking forward only. Nor can France avoid turning her eyes from that boiling 200-mile cauldron north and west of Paris to glance apprehensively over her right shoulder to where Italy stands poised for a plunge into the war.

Italian Plans Secret

The first shock of battle may come on that Mediterranean front at any moment. But it is not clear, perhaps even to Berlin just where and how Italy will strike—if she does. There are circumstances about Italian hesitancy over taking the final plunge which imply that Il Duce has plans wholly his own, unshared with his German axis mate, for exploiting the plight of France and Britain.

A Berlin report that Rome is awaiting final assurance that France's airforce has been removed by German action does not cast Mussolini in a flattering role in German eyes. Nor can it be seriously doubted that Italy's first consideration as a belligerent, wherever and however she strikes, must be the Anglo-French naval perponderance in the Mediterranean.

That suggests that any air aid Italy might render Germany by attacks on the French Mediterranean coast or in the Rhone valley would be limited. The primary mission of the Italian airforce and Italy's huge fleet of submarines must be to locate and attack French and British sea forces. Unless they can be eliminated, Italian hopes of breaking the Gibraltar and Suez canal shackles on her economic aspirations must go unrewarded, even if France finally succumbs to the German onslaught or is driven back behind her Marne-Paris-Seine lines of defense.

British Expect Attack

There can be no doubt that British defenders of Malta are keyed to expect momentarily the roar of Italian air attack. It is there that Italy's first stroke could be expected to fall if she is planning a campaign to dominate the Mediterranean, seize French Tunisia and Corsica, or even if, against German interests, she moves to set the Balkans also aflame with war.

Such speculation as to Italy's real objective if she takes the war plunge tend to reduce French fears that any great part of the Italian air force will be thrown into the scales against her.

The rigid censorship in Paris and Berlin on details of the fighting in France makes it difficult to discern the actual battle line. Unless there have been German penetrations unreported as this is written, however, the Weygand web still is stoutly guarding the Oise valley gateway to Paris and the heart of France.

Dewey Urges

Views On Rearmament

"Here in America precious time has been lost. We cannot rely upon the hope that our administration will muddle through. Our national responsibility must not be left in the hands of our Chamberlains. America must have an administrative organization in Washington competent to carry out our national defense program swiftly and surely. x x x

"Since the crisis has become acute the administration has fumbled with national defense just as it fumbled for seven years with national recovery.

"Today we face the tremendous task of expanding our industrial production to meet the needs of national defense. We face this task with our national finances seriously strained and an industrial system that has been systematically sabotaged by government policy.

"The country now knows sorely we need the industrial capacity which we might have had, if the New Deal had not bound and gagged the forces of expansion."

The New York campaigner, who has the promised support of at least four of the mountain state's sixteen-man convention delegation, charged that from the first the nation realized the administration was "utterly unfitted to the task that has been thrust upon it."

Inexperienced Cabinet

The cabinet is almost entirely without industrial experience, he asserted. When President Roosevelt announced he would call experts to Washington, there was no indication they would have power to carry out defense plans, he added.

It was not until public opinion made itself felt that the New Deal "grudgingly" gave in, Dewey said, and made the advisory commission responsible to the president, instead of the cabinet.

Dewey accused Mr. Roosevelt of "subterfuge" in his fireside chat of May 16. The president listed armaments and munitions "on hand and on order," Dewey said, but the most of it was "on order."

"At a time when the country wanted to hear the cold truth about our preparedness," Dewey told the crowd, "it received from its president only deceptive statements about equipment 'on hand and on order'. Equipment 'on order' is no equipment. An anti-aircraft gun 'on order' will not bring down a bombing plane an enemy has 'on hand.'

German Bombers

status on French battlefields as "pretty good" but wondered whether the main attack of the Germans yet had been made.

25 Planes Downed

The loss of ten British planes was acknowledged, but the ministry declared fifteen German aircraft had been shot down. British bombing targets such as railways, bridges, troops, gun emplacements, tank columns and oil refineries were "systematically and repeatedly bombed" behind the Somme front, in France and in northwest Germany.

The British reported they dropped seventy bombs on a big refinery south of Hamburg, setting great fires there and also on a large oil storage plant near Delmenhorst.

Their high explosive bombs smashed one end of a tunnel south of Aachen, blocking the main railway.

The British raiders also ranged the full length of the German lines and behind the lines in northern France, setting new fires at a previously-bombed oil depot at Ghent, plowing into German-held airdromes and Arras and Norderney, and slashing at rail lines, marching troops and columns of trucks.

Air raid warnings were sounded in two towns near England's east coast tonight.

An air raid warning also was sounded in Kent, east of London.

Civil Workers Needed

Sir John Anderson, minister of home defense, issued a call for thousands of civil workers and in a nationwide broadcast asked everyone in Britain to "learn the rules of air raid precautions."

The minister called for volunteer police, fire, air raid precaution workers and nurses to register immediately.

He said its powers under the defense act enabled the government to compel the nation's subjects to participate in such work but that he believed it should be voluntary.

During the day planes believed to be German reconnaissance craft scouted Surrey. Britons got ready to give a hot reception to any bombers which might follow the scouts during the night.

To guard against a night invasion by sea the admiralty established a three-mile curfew zone all around the United Kingdom. All ships were forbidden to enter that zone between sunset and sunrise except in organized convoys.

Plane Production Gaining

Lord Beaverbrook, minister of aircraft, declared that Britain had made giant strides in plane production in her effort to offset Nazi numerical superiority in the air.

Previously Britain had declared she shot down four for every British plane lost in Flanders. Lord Beaverbrook declared she had kept ahead of her losses.

Germany's air force was estimated by Beaverbrook at 11,675 planes, of which two-fifths were front line or combat craft. He said the Reich had 16,000 pilots, of whom 12,000 had recent training.

As air raids became more numerous the U. S. embassy urged all Americans who do not have urgent reasons for staying in England to return to the United States aboard the liner Washington leaving Galway, Ireland, about the middle of June.

The embassy warned that this might be their last opportunity to go home until after the war.

guns than they had expected in the new Weygand line.

The army called the line "Weygand's surprise" and declared it had been "broken on a front sixty-two miles wide."

While the German populace waited for radio announcements of the progress of the Nazi armies the press and other informed sources spread various reports of Germany's strength and favorable position in the war.

Nazi Oil Reserve High

The German oil reserve, it was said, has risen from a six-month supply at the beginning of the war to an eight-month supply now.

In Germany, Italy's plunge into the war was explained to be contingent on destruction of the French air force and a siege of Paris which would pull away French manpower from drives France might make at Italian possessions.

While British war industries ran at top speed to supply equipment and munitions for new divisions and to replace that lost in Flanders, the Royal Air Force vigorously entered the battle of the Somme to hold up Britain's share of the fight.

The British air ministry declared its fliers in constant action over the Somme front and in Germany.

As her own fliers winged back and forth from England to the battle-front, Britain strengthened her air raid defenses in expectation of the third successive night of raids.

Egypt, busy with preparations for war in the Mediterranean apparently was not impressed by a newspaper report that Italy had promised Egyptian frontiers would be respected if Italy goes to war against the Allies.

The report was made by the newspaper Al Bassir.

Premier Aly Maher Pasha countered the report with the assertion that Egypt was doing all possible to guard against a surprise attack and that the nation would fulfill every obligation under her alliance with Great Britain.

Ford May Build Planes

The United States, busy with its own great defense program, made a preliminary move toward possible production of warplanes on a vast scale.

A war department announcement said a pursuit plane of the latest type would be flown to Detroit where an engineer would explain it to Henry Ford's engineers. Recently Ford said that if he were free of government interference he could produce 1,000 planes of a standard type daily, within six months.

President Roosevelt applauded a newspaper editorial urging compulsory military training in the United States and asked Congress for authority to turn old army guns back to manufacturers, a move that would get them quickly into the hands of British and French soldiers.

The president's unhesitating remarks on compulsory military training gave observers the conviction that he had been studying the matter.

House Passes Wagner Act Changes, But Senate Pigeonhole May Follow

WASHINGTON, June 7 (AP)—By a vote of exactly two to one, the House passed and sent to the Senate today a series of Wagner act amendments to create a new, three-man National Labor Relations Board and make sweeping changes in its present procedure.

The same coalition of Republicans and Democrats which had held the upper hand for three days of preliminary fighting rolled up a 258 to 129 vote for the revisions, despite the fact that all factions agreed that they would wind up in a pigeonhole in the Senate.

The amendments were virtually the same as those approved by a majority of the five-man committee headed by Representative Smith (D-Va) which has been investigating the Wagner act and the Labor Board since last December.

Change in Functions

Besides abolishing the positions now held by labor board members J Warren Madden, Edwin S. Smith and William M. Leiserson, the Smith amendments would separate the board's present administrative and judicial functions by establishing the position of an administrator. Sponsors said this procedure would leave the new board free to concentrate its attention on judicial functions.

The amendments also would abolish the economics division now headed by David J. Saposs; would permit court review of board decisions in representation cases and would require the board to acknowledge craft unions as bargaining agents if a majority of the members of such unions so desired.

Minority Fights Hard

Opposing these propositions at every turn, a minority tried in vain to confine the House amendments to a series of four, approved by the House Labor Committee and built around the addition of two new members to the three-man board.

But this group was beaten, once on a teller vote of 178 to 111 and on roll call votes of 246 to 137 and 258 to 129.

Only five changes were made in the original Smith bill—four of them recommended by President William Green of the American Federation of Labor.

The fifth—by Rep. Allen (D-Pa)—would relieve employers of requirement that they bargain with labor representatives who are not citizens of the United States.

Germans Pay

cut them down with crossfire—were holding firm.

The day's action along the 125-mile front of the Somme and Aisne thus saw heavy action at both ends, and also at Weygand's strongly defended center.

But with their tanks bogging down in the swamps of the Bresle valley, the German main push appeared tonight to be concentrated on the east flank.

On the sides of Soissons to the north and east Nazi forces poured down from the Ailette, massing along the Aisne for continuing attacks.

The effort to cross the Aisne—in an area about sixty miles from Paris—was choked off in one of the day's most violent battles.

An artillery bombardment ushered it in, but those who bridged the river did so only to die on the left bank.

The center of the front was no less ablaze. There, the war ministry spokesman announced, the Germans were attacking heavily tonight, with tanks and new waves of infantrymen.

The center blow was sprung from the Ois valley, north of Soissons, an old battleground.

Bag Many More Tanks

In the whole battle area, where half a million Nazis were on the charge, the French reported cutting down many more German tanks than the 400 already declared to have been smashed in traps. The dive bombers, so active in the German successes in the north, were fewer, too, today.

The French used cannon-carrying airplanes to pound the tanks from above.

In this third day of the battle of France, as Weygand has chosen to call it, the Reichswehr used forty divisions of infantry to fold back the flanks of the French and try to take the Weygand line from the rear.

Tonight Weygand's center remained intact.

The Germans used two Panzer divisions, or 1,000 tanks, in the Peronne sector alone yesterday in trying to break into the Oise valley which leads south to Paris.

Weather Favors Hitler

They failed to open a breach in the French line of support points, however.

For the twenty-ninth successive day of the campaign on the western front and the third day of this battle the weather favored Hitler. It was clear and hot and there was no sign tonight of a break.

The Germans were estimated to have another 2,000 tanks in reserve, with their total force originally 4,000, waiting to drive through any gap in the French lines.

But with Weygand himself at the front, the French troops were carrying out orders to stick to support posts to the end, raining artillery and anti-tank gun fire on the tanks from all sides, while planes bombed and shelled them from above.

Besides directing the battle in person, Weygand is writing the two daily communiques himself.

His order for the first day of the battle, telling his men to "look only forward" and "hold tight to the soil of France," was published today.

He has adapted his army, once hailed as the best in the old world, to defend against Germany's new mechanized warfare, and he has shown that the Reichswehr's rush can be checked.

Back of his "deep Somme-Aisne line, itself a quagmire of staggered support points to trap and smash the German tanks, Weygand has sown the fifty-mile-deep area clear to the Seine with anti-tank defense nests.

The roads are barricaded and there are strong support points armed both with anti-tank guns and machine-guns.

Garbage Trucks Mobilized

Even in Paris the garbage trucks are mobile machine-gun units now, strategic gates of the city are barricaded and there are steel anti-parachutist posts in the beautiful Champs Elysees.

While the battle of France went on in all its fury, the Germans sent 200 planes today into central France.

They passed around Paris while air raid sirens howled, then flew on south. An official announcement, later, said they did "material damage" in an unspecified central section.

Paris itself lies within seventy miles of the battle zone.

The active battle zone stretches from the channel to the war-trampled ridges of the Chemin-Des-Dames between the Ailette and the Aisne rivers, some 125 miles in all.

France's government maintained its confidence.

blow at Italian overseas possessions.

Meanwhile confidence grew that the conquest of Paris is but a matter of days.

Nazi newspapers stressed that France now fights alone—with the German punch toward Le Havre intended to separate finally the French and British fighting forces.

Then would come what the press has termed "settlement with England."

All French Troops in Action

One newspaper said "France fights x x x without the possibility of strategic tactical utilization of the Maginot line. Weygand x x x has thrown all available troops and materials into the Somme-Aisne defenses to oppose the German attack as long as possible."

It added:

"His preparations on these historic rivers can hardly hold off the Germans with countless new divisions after the Germans already have broken through the line on a front sixty-two miles wide."

High army sources disclosed, however, that France's swiftly-devised defense system made the going hard and gave the Reich's blitzkrieg machine a "real problem."

Heavy artillery fire and an ingenious use of natural obstacles to make every gulley a trench, every clump of trees a fort, were combined in France's stubborn defense of every inch of the homeland soil.

The French, it was admitted, were not caught napping by the drive south.

Gains ranging from twelve to eighteen miles were claimed in the second day of assault, with further advances the third day that were not described in detail or extent.

Heaviest fighting was in the push south from Abbeville to positions near the Bresle river on the hard-fought way toward Le Havre, and toward Paris down the arrowhead formed by the Aisne and Oise rivers.

Raiders Driven Off

The Germans reported driving off with anti-aircraft fire a British raid over Hamburg, Germany's principal port. Bombs were said to have fallen in a field at the edge of town.

Again the German air force struck blows of its own.

Returning bomber crews told of blasting airports from which British airmen operate in western France, and starting huge fires with explosives hurled at the big French port of Cherbourg.

The air ministry reported "big conflagrations and explosions were observed on the quays and piers" at Cherbourg and heavy damage was caused to airdromes in eastern and central France.

Raids on the British air force were described as paving the way for the crushing of England.

The commander of a German destroyer said the Nazi outpost at the iron ore port of Narvik, Norway, completely wrecked the har- British and Norwegian attack. The bor facilities before the city fell to Germans, he said, had few losses.

General Weygand Directing Battle

NEW YORK, June 8—(Saturday) (AP)—A British radio report, picked up by CBS early today, quoted a member of the French war ministry as saying that Allied Generalissimo Maxime Weygand had gone to the Somme front from Paris and was "directing personally the continuation of the battle."

New Income Tax

was enacted. The basic exemption for married couples would be cut from $2,500 to $2,000 and for single persons from $1,000 to $800.

Provides Supertax

In addition, the measure would impose a supertax of ten percent of the normal tax for the next five years; increase surtax rates on the income brackets between $6,000 and $100,000 and boost corporation income taxes by one percent of taxable income.

Persons not affected by the income tax increases will be reached for part of the defense costs through increases of ten percent or more which the bill would impose on virtually all existing excuse tax levies, such as the tax on gasoline. The latter is tentatively scheduled to go up a half cent from the present one cent levy.

Chairman Cooper (D-Tenn), who said the bill was unanimously approved by his subcommittee, told newsmen that the lowering of income tax exemptions was intended to be permanent law, as was the imposition of the higher surtaxes.

All the increases would apply to 1940 incomes on which taxes will be due next March 15.

The ten percent supertax would apply, however, only to the five years beginning with 1940.

Explains Increases

As an illustration of the effect of the increases, Cooper said that under existing law, a married man with no dependents and a $3,000 net earned income pays $8. Under the proposed rates he would pay $30.80.

Under existing law, this taxpayer would get a $2,500 exemption because of his married status, plus a further deduction of ten percent of his earned income. This would bring his taxable income down to $200. The government would collect four percent of this, or $8. Under the proposed law, he would get a $2,000 exemption for being married, plus the ten percent deduction for earned income. Therefore, his taxable income would be $700. Four percent of this would be $28. To this would be added the supertax of ten percent of $28, or $2.80. Thus the total tax bill would be $30.80.

Cooper explained that the ten percent supertax is computed on the basis of the amount of tax due under the higher rates and is added to that total.

Authority of State Magistrates Defined

BALTIMORE, June 7 (AP)—Magistrates who actually witness law violations are empowered to make arrests without showing official credentials, the state law department held today.

Deputy Attorney General William L. Henderson, in an opinion written for Louis M. Leimbach, Howard county trial magistrate, noted however that, in such cases, the arresting magistrate must inform the offender "of your official position."

When a magistrate makes an arrest, the opinion continued, "the Court of Appeals has said that it ought to appear that at the time of the arrest he acted and professed to act in his official capacity and he ought to notify the party arrested of such a fact."

"Such justice should not attempt to try the case himself," the ruling noted.

Leimbach also asked if a trial magistrate had authority to impose a fine less than the minimum imposed by statute. Henderson advised him that magistrates lacked such power.

Jury Awards Man Million Dollars In Strange Cas

Estate of S. M. Nichols Must Pay Friend for Companionship

PROVIDENCE, R. I., June 7. (AP)—Hushed gasps of amazement a in a sparsely filled courtroom today as a Superior Court jury turned a verdict of $1,000,000 $33,338.21 interest for Dutee Flint in his promissory note aga the estate of Samuel M. Nichol wealthy industrialist.

Flint, whose suit for $1,000,000 been heard for the past se weeks, claimed the late Col. N olson had given his a promis note for that amount, "payable ter death" in return for "inv able services" he had rendered aged man.

Trial of the million-dollar started last April 23 with Flint tifying he had lost a $10,000,000 tor car business in the 1929 cr and that Col. Nicholson had pr ised to "make him a million again" in return for his "virtual slavement" to the head of the N olson File Company.

He described his activities as and butler, "man Friday" and el agent, backgammon opponent business mentor to the aged ma return for which Col. Nicho handed him the million-dollar payable after death.

During the lengthy proceedi defense counsel introduced witne es who testified the colonel wa unsound mind at the time the was signed in October, 1937, and closing argument, contended it been obtained by fraud.

Flint's counsel, however, scribed Col. Nicholson as a "lo old man" who turned to Flint the friendship and companion he craved.

Surplus Explanation Is Not Convincing

EXPLANATION by Joseph O. C. McCusker, deputy state comptroller, of the alleged discrepencies in the state treasury surplus, is not convincing.

The discrepencies charged by Herbert Fallin, Baltimore city budget director, are that the net surplus of $4,467,725.16 as of last September 30, the close of the fiscal year, was obtained by the inclusion of receipts from an emergency bond issue of $5,276,651, as well as various diverted funds. These diversions, Fallin pointed out, were from gasoline taxes, state road accounts, bond-annuity revenues and money from other sources, which with the bond receipts totaled approximately $13,000,000.

McCusker declared that the reported surplus is beyond dispute and that "where it came from is purely academic", the reported surplus having been a "working balance," there being "only one way to describe funds left over at the end of a fiscal year after all bills are paid—it's a surplus."

But, receipts from a bond issue are not net so long as the bonds are outstanding as a liability; so just how the latter can lightly be tossed out the window is not understandable. There certainly ought not be any confusion on the part of any one conversant with the principles of bookkeeping as to the difference between cash balances and surpluses. There can be a large cash balance with a heavy deficit, as any manager or auditor well knows.

The reference to diverted funds brings to mind the inescapable fact that this is the continuation of a practice long exercised by Democratic state administrations, despite reassurances given that it was dropped. Governor Nice was forced to exercise it by reason of the fiscal mess left him by his predecessor, and his valiant efforts to stop it were flouted by a jealous Democratic legislature. But Democratic critics made a big hullabaloo about it and kept up the din to a point of persecution. The revelation that it is again being practiced after a surplus left by the Nice administration paved the way for complete avoidance gives these selfsame critics further opportunity for squawking, but for some reason or other they are strangely silent about it.

Younger Generation Is Recognized by Party

IT is of interest to note that the official personnel that will manage the Republican national convention to be held the week of June 24 at Philadelphia, just completed, includes an alert and aggressive young Republican warrior from a nearby town. He is William S. Livingood, Jr., of Somerset, Pa., whose residence for the time being is at Philadelphia by reason of his official position as Pennsylvania state secretary of internal affairs. He will be an assistant secretary of the convention, the chief secretary of which will be Harold V. Mason, of Brattleboro, Vt.

A number of the younger party leaders have been included in the convention officiate. This recognition of outstanding members of the younger generation who have displayed brains and ability is a reminder that the party is keeping up with the times and is not the decrepit thing its public trough-feeding critics try to make out.

Australians and the War of Aggression

THE NEW AUSTRALIAN MINISTER TO THE UNITED STATES, the Rt. Hon. R. G. Casey, in a public address the other day, gave about as clear a definition of the Allied objective in the war as any that has been vouchsafed.

Australians, as citizens of an independent unit of the British empire, bound to it only by a common sovereign and a common ideal of living, believe that recent history shows the leaders of present-day Germany mean, "by fair means or foul, to extend their power without pity and without limit; that they are prosecuting a "carefully thought out and extremely well-prepared attempt to overturn the entire world order—a general clean-up aimed at making Germany, once and for all, the dominant force in the world—and that the coldly calculated attempt is only limited by opportunity and is to be carried through with fire and sword aided by treachery and bribery from within."

Thus, Casey said, Australians believe that "a destructive force has arisen which threatens the whole basis of world civilization as we have known it," which has to be defeated; that "the leaders of the German nation today have outraged the fundamental principles which make life of this earth possible"; that the rules of decency should be observed; that "a man who kicks to death some small helpless individual is a cur"; and that constructive ability, not destruction, should be the criterion of success.

Australians have no material aims in this war, Casey noted, but have the greater aim—"that of retaining our freedom and independence—the right to pass on to our children the privilege of calling themselves Australians and to control our own destinies and to govern ourselves as we think fit and proper." A sufficient aim, indeed, which, however, does not accord with the Nazi idea of aggression. But the Australians are backing it up in a substantial way.

Casey noted that, in addition to providing a substantial navy, Australia is manufacturing airplanes, guns, shells, machine guns, and indeed all types of munitions in Australia in great quantities; is training and sending overseas an army corps of three divisions besides having five or six divisions on a war footing in Australia, and has in training, besides an air force for home defense the first contingents of what will eventually be a force of 50,000 air pilots, observers, gunners and radio operators.

It is difficult to imagine that a people with a faith like this can ever suffer themselves to go down to defeat.

Willkie Candidacy Gets Remarkable Headway

ONE of the most remarkable developments in the American political field is the way in which the spontaneous drive for the nomination of Wendell Willkie for the presidency has spread throughout the country.

Volunteer groups supporting the Willkie candidacy report that "Willkie for President" clubs are springing up all over the country at the rate of approximately eight a day and that Willkie petitions are being signed in a steadily mounting tide. K. B. Emmons, secretary of the Volunteer Mailing Committee for Distributing Willkie speeches, situated in the Murray Hill hotel in New York city, states that more than thirty states now have organized Willkie clubs.

Here is an extraordinary case of the old saw about the office seeking the man rather than the man the office. Willkie had no idea of being a presidential candidate and was amazed when he was drafted as such by admiring friends. Written articles and speeches gave evidence of his capacity for the job along with his background of energetic industrial leadership, however, and his candidacy, generally regarded at the outset as hopeless, will be something to reckon with when the Republican national convention is held.

The chateau of P. G. Wodehouse, famed British humorist who created the world's most noted fictional valet, is reported in a French area overrun by Germans. "Jeeves, do not show them in."

The United States invented the airplane, the machine gun, the submarine and the principle of the tank. Maybe we should have taken out patents.

Congress is beginning to talk taxes. Taxpayers should be calm at this time, however. The big tax blitzkrieg will come next year.

Now it is said Hitler got his war strategy from America. Where he got his hair cut and mustache trim is still a mystery.

The trouble with fast driving is that when a car hits sixty that often isn't the only thing it hits.

Science gets wonderfuller and wonderfuller. A New Jersey fish market advertises milk-fed halibut.

The Browser's Findings

By MARSHALL MASLIN

Author John W. Vandercook fell in love with an empress who lived more than fifteen centuries ago and the result is "Empress of the Dusk" (Reynal & Hitchcock).

Marshall Maslin

The lady is Theodora of Byzantium, ancient Constantinople, and Mr. Vandercook had to do much guessing and reconstructing. He begins with this paragraph: "In the year 500 the world seemed old. Rome had failed. The giant state that for four centuries had ruled the earth had been built upon too vast a plan. It was now crumbling. . . The long play seemed drawing to a close and the leading actors had already gone.

But in the East, where aging Rome had come, seeking sun to comfort its senility, one could still be young. And the young, when they have courage, forget their world is dying. A girl of the streets for a time became the Empress. Because she had valor and beauty and pride, the fire of Imperial splendor flared once more before, forever, it guttered and went out."

The tale that Vandercook tells is thrilling, and Theodora's dramatic rise to power could have occurred only in a disintegrating civilization. Vandercook admits that Procopius of Caesarea, who is the standard authority on Theodora, is worthless because he hated this girl who achieved joint rule with Justinian over the Roman Empire. He is therefore compelled to prune Procopius and invent details of her life as a street girl, prostitute, dancer, actress and wanderer on the shores of the Mediterranean.

Most of the historians agree that the Emperor Justinian was weak, but Vandercook makes him strong except for the one weak moment when revolt broke up from the street mobs and he would have fled had not Theodora stood firm and merciless. The book has its weak spots, but one respect Mr. Vandercook has achieved memorable clarity—he gives us a startling picture of the savage, immoral, headless and scrabbling people of Byzantium.

Also, the Browser thinks the author had his eye on the present rather than on the past in those pages where he writes of the Huns and Germans. For example: "The barbarians of the German forests loved war for its own sake. They still thought of it as noble. . . There was no more conspicuous fact in history than that a treaty with the Germans was worthless. . . The General Germanicus, after a lifetime of experience with them, had come to the bitter conclusion that all agreements with them were waste paper and that there could be no real peace in Europe until they were utterly destroyed."

Johan Fabricius, whose "Son of Marietta" was a best seller four years ago, has spent the years since then in writing "A Castle in Carinthia" (Random House), a rich chronicle of a noble Austrian family. It begins in the decade before the first World War, when society seemed secure and common life safe for all. It ends in the middle twenties, when the people of the castle of the Weygands seem to have achieved a new stability. Wise, sensitive and understanding, a good book that deserves thoughtful appreciation. And it should not go unnoticed even in these perilous times.

BOOK ENDS: Could you write a book-length personal history of some significant aspect of American life for a prize of $2,500? Then write to the Life-in-America editor of Houghton Mifflin Company, 2 Park street, Boston, for details. . . Viking Press has printed 33,000 copies of Upton Sinclair's "World's End", exclusive of Literary Guild copies, one month before publication date. . . Hans Zinsser's "As I Remember Him: the Biography of R. S." has been postponed until June 25. It's a delightful life of a doctor, written with humor and authority. "R. S." is "H. Z." (with modifications) thinks Marsh Maslin.

Institute Gets Report on Queer Jungle Ant Tree

By EDWIN C. HILL

Edwin C. Hill

O. L. Haught, oil geologist and explorer in eastern Colombia, turns in to the Smithsonian Institution an account of something that suggests a Trojan tree. It is an ant tree, known as the barrasanta, and it is involved in what appears to be a thoroughly unscrupulous conspiracy between the animal and vegetable kindgdoms. That doesn't sound reasonable, but is there anything now which does sound reasonable? We ask you.

The collusive villainies of the tree and the ants are set forth as follows:

This tree is slender, graceful and beautiful, about thirty feet high, one of the showiest trees in the jungle. It has large and extraordinarily beautiful red flowers. These fascinating flowers were a lure to white men until they learned better. Both trunk and branches of this tree are hollow, as if the job had been done by a good plumber with copper tubing, and they provide a perfect fortress and supply base for the ants. The garrison within is made of a tribe of singularly vicious and savage ants, inflicting bites both dangerous and painful. The slightest disturbance to the tree brings them charging forth in full panoply. Indians and white men have learned to circle a long way around the enticing barrasanta. Thus left alone, the tree advances through the jungle.

Mr. Haught suggests a fifty-fifty arrangement — the tree providing barracks for the advancing ants and the ants doing battle to protect the advancing tree.

Noted by Scientists

I believe insect-plant association, in which survival interests are pooled, has been noted by scientists in many instances. However, they disclose novel defense techniques as well as occasional collusion.

Mr. Haught describes the mountainous anthills in the llanos region of western Colombia. These energetic and ruthless ants are "leaf cutters," and their neighborhood is denuded of vegetation—that is, almost denuded. There was one curious little shrub which went in for preparedness. It is in general appearance much like other shrubs and must have looked like a push-over to the big jungle ants when they started swarming over it. But were they surprised! As the ants attack they are caught, in a viscous, transparent juice, exuded all along the branches and trunk of the shrub. It is nothing less than glue and the ant would do just as well to step into an ant-size bear trap. He dies on the spot.

Avoided by Plant Life

The soil is exceptionally deep and rich in this llanos region. But plant life of all kinds avoids it. On these barren hummocks there are only two old settlers—the ants with their huge mounds and the smart little shrub which learned how to defend itself in the clinches. But elsewhere through the jungle there are many trees known as mymecophyls, or ant lovers. They made a deal and live on in joint outlawry with the predatory ants.

Mr. Haught turns in a tale of scientists studying flowers by airplane. So deep and dense is the jungle that the flowers have to migrate to the tree tops to get sun and air. The aviator, flying low over the tree tops, sees a magnificent blossoming garden beneath him.

Sluggish Are Written Off

We could cite several wise fabulists, starting with Aesop, as well as quite a few scientists, to gear this life urgency for survival to mundane affairs today. But that would be laboring a point. Obviously life gets by, and no doubt will keep on doing so by processes of adaptation and defense and the creature that is too sluggish for such adaptation is casually written off.

We saw an ant lugging across the terrace a bread crumb which had been tossed out for the birds. It was perhaps fifty times bigger than the ant but he heaved it along steadily. It took him perhaps fifteen minutes to get it across the terrace and then he entered the tall grass—jungle to him. I was determined to see what he would do with it.

The afternoon wore away as he worked perhaps fifty feet into the grass, performing prodigious feats of strength as he scrambled through with his burden. Finally he laid down the bread crumb, lay on his back, flexed his muscles, took a casual bite out of the crumb and started on a long trek back to the terrace again. It seemed silly, as most of our own highly particularized endeavors might seem to a higher intelligence. But perhaps there is design, pattern, meaning in it all. Who knows?—Copyright, 1940, King Features Syndicate, Inc.

New Deal Whisper Squad Works Hard Trying To Postpone GOP Convention

By FRANKLYN WALTMAN

For several weeks the whisper squad of the Democratic National Committee and the New Deal palace guards have been setting off rumors to the effect that the Republicans intend to postpone their national convention, scheduled to start at Philadelphia on June 24.

Of course there is not a word of truth in these whispered rumors. But it is interesting to explore the reasons why the Democrats seem so anxious to have the Republican convention postponed. Obviously the New Dealers are attempting to bolster up the courage of their followers by this fanciful effort to make it appear that Republicans are uncertain of the course they wish to pursue.

But there is a more subtle purpose underneath these New Deal whispers. Actually the New Deal whispers are based on wishful thinking. If the Republican convention could be postponed that would give the New Dealers justification for postponing their convention—or perhaps calling it off altogether.

Democratic Convention Needless

Indeed, there is no genuine reason why there should be a Democratic national convention this year. Just as in 1936, the duly elected delegates will be nothing more than stooges—window dressing, if you please—for giving a semblance of legality to plans determined by the White House. Mr. Roosevelts' patronage machine, with billions from the Treasury, already has made certain his iron-fisted control of the convention. Thus he is able to renominate himself for the unprecedented third term, to dictate his running mate and to write any kind of platform he desires.

If proof of this contention were needed, it is given to us by John O'Donnell and Doris Fleeson, the Washington correspondents of the New Deal New York Daily News. These two correspondents are great admirers of Mr. Roosevelt and the New Deal. They frequently reflect the thinking that goes on in the White House's inner circle.

This is what they have just reported to their newspapers:

"Franklin D. Roosevelt of Hyde Park, N. Y., and James Francis Byrnes of Spartansburg, S. C., will be named by acclamation to head the Democratic ticket when the delegates assemble for their national convention in Chicago during the week of July 15.

"The nominations will be first-ballot, New Deal blitzkrieg! Orders for the political panzertroopen of the regimented faithful have been worked out to the final detail—even to the new marching song. Mr. Roosevelt's old 'Happy Days Are Here Again,' has been ditched because of the international situation, and gives way in the '40 campaign to the lilting 'Franklin D. Roosevelt Jones.'"

To Accept Nomination by Telephone

This pair of New Deal writers further report that arrangements have been made for the president to accept his unanimous nomination by long distance telephone, speaking from the White House!

Acceptance of the nomination by long distance telephone would certainly be the appropriate ending of such a "New Deal blitzkrieg." It would mark Mr. Roosevelt's deserved contempt for what Miss Fleeson and Mr. O'Donnell term the "political panzertroopen of the regimented faithful."

But why should tht delegates to the Democratic national convention waste time and money even going to Chicago, in view of the program already worked out for them aboard Mr. Roosevelt's yacht. It would appear from the O'Donnell-Fleeson story that no dissenting voice must be by acclamation, why should not the delegates be permitted to send postal cards marked in big letters with the word "JA." That is the way Hitler does it.

Master and Servant

New Jersey Man Says People of America Must Wake Up

Editor The Cumberland News:

When the servant dons the clothes of the master, and pretends to be the master, he begins to think that he is the master, and acts accordingly.

This is true in many walks of life, and especially so in matters of government.

When the president of the United States forgets that he is the servant of all the people, and attempts to become their master, the least punishment that he deserves is removal from office.

When members of Congress forget that they are public servants, and pass legislation or appropriate money to benefit minority pressure groups to the disadvantage of the people as a whole, they are assuming the role of master, and the least punishment that they deserve is rejection at the polls.

When teachers in public schools forget that they are employed to assist parents in educating their children, and presume to inculcate in the minds of the children political doctrines and theories foreign to the beliefs and policies of the parents of the children, these teachers are assuming the role of master and the least punishment they deserve is dismissal.

How much longer will the people of this country continue to slumber and sleep? Wake up America!

Quotable Quotes

By William Moulton Marston, Distinguished Psychologist, in the Rotarian Magazine

Today, more than ever, concentration is essential to the full enjoyment of pleasures or to effective work. This is an age of distraction, with interruptions by phone, by friends, by noise, by scares, and by our own flightiness. Increasingly work must be done under conditions which are inhospitable to concentration, yet on concentration depends, more and more, a man's success in this specialized world.

A Great Problem Faces Humanity

From the Cincinnati Enquirer

It may be that the more spectacular sufferings of the war refugees in France and England are eased for the moment, though even yet the highways still are filled with the pitiful cavalcade of old men, women and children in desperate search of shelter, food and safety.

But the American public should need no daily account of the machine-gunning and the blasting of refugees to know that the question of their care is one of the greatest problems which has faced humanity in at least a quarter of a century.

The facts are indisputable. It is not a matter of propaganda or of conjecture that there are many hundreds of thousands of people who need our help in the refugee centers of France and England. They are there, visibly deprived of all their possessions except what they have managed to carry on their backs, visibly in need of food and shelter, and in many instances visibly in want of medical attention.

In France and England there is no insensibility to the needs of these people. But they are nations at war, fighting for their existence. They have neither the means nor the time to minister to the refugees' needs in full. There is very little we can do about the European war. But we can do this.

We can buy up and send overseas some of our surplus stocks of foods and other commodities, as our share in the humanitarian task. We can see that there is no epidemic of disease for want of medical supplies among the army of refugees. In general, we can relieve somewhat the burden of misery and sorrow which has fallen overnight upon the backs of millions of innocent people.

But we cannot accomplish this merely by wishing it done. Each of us must help some, each to the extent of his ability. The American Red Cross will translate your contribution into mercy for the refugees. Send your share today to the Red Cross.

Amendment Is Not Enough

From the Cincinnati Times-Star

The La Follette Civil Liberties bill passed the Senate and was sent to the House considerably altered from its original form. Originally the bill forbade the use of "oppressive labor practices" by employers in interstate commerce, including the use of strike-breakers and spies in labor disputes and the possession of firearms of tear gas. All these provisions are retained. The bill has been changed, however, to permit employers to obtain information about the political or economic views of employes or prospective employes. A more radical amendment by Senator Reynolds forbids the hiring of Communists or Nazi Bund members under penalty of $10,000 fine and five years in prison.

The purpose of the Reynolds amendment — to prevent fifth-column activities in plants vital to the national defense—is, of course, excellent. But employers are given no power to carry it out. They may seek information about the political or economic views of employes, but how? Obviously, no worker will admit that he is a Communist or Nazi Bund member. To protect themselves against heavy penalties, employers will have to hire investigators. But if a labor dispute is on and a Communist or bund in a plant could easily provoke one—the investigators might be regarded as labor spies and employers would then fall afoul of the law.

The La Follette bill, with its invitation to sabotage in munition plants, was bad enough in the first place. As amended it is even worse. It imposes heavy new obligations on employers without giving them the power to meet those obligations. Amendment is not what this bill needs. It needs killing.

Much Nonsense Over CCC Training, Johnson Says

BY HUGH S. JOHNSON

Hugh Johnson

MINNEAPOLIS, June 7—It is time for some nonsense to propose, by law, "non-combatant" military training for the CCC Boys. What is non-combatant military service? It is a contradiction in terms—like talking about a two-legged quadruped or a one-bladed pair of shears.

A man may, as has been suggested, serve in the army as a cook, a truck-driver or an oxy-acetylene welder and many such will be needed. But he is a soldier just the same and is not recognized, at international or military law, as a non-combatant. This is just monkey business with words.

This column has long opposed drafting CCC boys as such by any device. They are poor. Whatever form of military service we adopt must demand absolutely equal sacrifice regardless of wealth or poverty, race or religion, color or politics. But giving military training is not requiring military service. In times like these it is a great boon to any boy who may later be called upon under our democratic form of selective drafting to do military service.

May Save Life and Limb

In the first place, it may save his live or limbs. It is the "half-baked recruit" who, is slaughtered like sheep and who, as Kipling says, "wonders because he is frequent deceased, are 'e's fit for to serve as a soldier." In the second place, if our bungling, blundering foreign and defense policies do get us into this bloody mess and require the raising of mass armies, the boy who has had sound military training before conscription starts will have a very great advantage over his fellows in advancement, pay and comforts.

My only boy has had about all the military instruction the army gives to men his age and if I had another son who had none now, would consider the best thing I could do for him would be to see to it that he got an intensive course in military training as promptly as it could be arranged.

Basic Training Essential

It is true that modern war requires specialists in almost every branch of human effort—but basic military training is necessary in addition to any special civilian skill a boy may have. General Marshall is reported to have said that the Army prefers to give these boys only "non-combatant" training because it is "inconvenient" to give combatant training in CCC camps.

I hate to disagree with the Chief of Staff because we are fortunate to have in him at this critical hour one of the best of the world's professional soldiers. It is even hard for me to believe that he said this because it is wrong to the point of absurdity.

But General Marshall is an official of this administration—and utterly loyal. The whole of administration policy on defense has been politically timid and never frank. Up to the point of training by battalions the CCC camps and organizations are almost ideal if the Army is prepared to furnish enough instructors and if it isn't so prepared there isn't any use talking about training anybody.

Is Multiple Insurance

Training now is multiple insurance against harm and danger, to the boy himself, to men later drafted raw from the streets that he may have to lead and train and, above all, to the nation which, if war comes, will find its very existence depending upon the degree of skill, strength and toughness of the men in its armed forces.

CCC boys thus trained will be subject to conscription to exactly the same extent and to no greater degree than any other young men of their age and condition as to health and dependency of others upon them. Let's not hobble ourselves with any such nonsensical legal restrictions.—Distributed by United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

Surplus Explanation Is Not Convincing

EXPLANATION by Joseph O. C. McCusker, deputy state comptroller, of the alleged discrepencies in the state treasury surplus, is not convincing.

The discrepencies charged by Herbert Fallin, Baltimore city budget director, are that the net surplus of $4,467,725.16 as of last September 30, the close of the fiscal year, was obtained by the inclusion of receipts from an emergency bond issue of $5,276,651, as well as various diverted funds. These diversions, Fallin pointed out, were from gasoline taxes, state road accounts, bond-annuity revenues and money from other sources, which with the bond receipts totaled approximately $13,000,000.

McCusker declared that the reported surplus is beyond dispute and that "where it came from is purely academic", the reported surplus having been a "working balance," there being "only one way to describe funds left over at the end of a fiscal year after all bills are paid—it's a surplus."

But, receipts from a bond issue are not net so long as the bonds are outstanding as a liability; so just how the latter can lightly be tossed out the window is not understandable. There certainly ought not be any confusion on the part of any one conversant with the principles of bookkeeping as to the difference between cash balances and surpluses. There can be a large cash balance with a heavy deficit, as any manager or auditor well knows.

The reference to diverted funds brings to mind the inescapable fact that this is the continuation of a practice long exercised by Democratic state administrations, despite reassurances given that it was dropped. Governor Nice was forced to exercise it by reason of the fiscal mess left him by his predecessor, and his valiant efforts to stop it were flouted by a jealous Democratic legislature. But Democratic critics made a big hullabaloo about it and kept up the din to a point of persecution. The revelation that it is again being practiced after a surplus left by the Nice administration paved the way for complete avoidance gives these selfsame critics further opportunity for squawking, but for some reason or other they are strangely silent about it.

Younger Generation Is Recognized by Party

IT is of interest to note that the official personnel that will manage the Republican national convention to be held the week of June 24 at Philadelphia, just completed, includes an alert and aggressive young Republican warrior from a nearby town. He is William S. Livingood, Jr., of Somerset, Pa., whose residence for the time being is at Philadelphia by reason of his official position as Pennsylvania state secretary of internal affairs. He will be an assistant secretary of the convention, the chief secretary of which will be Harold V. Mason, of Brattleboro, Vt.

A number of the younger party leaders have been included in the convention officiate. This recognition of outstanding members of the younger generation who have displayed brains and ability is a reminder that the party is keeping up with the times and is not the decrepit thing its public trough-feeding critics try to make out.

Australians and the War of Aggression

THE NEW AUSTRALIAN MINISTER TO THE UNITED STATES, the Rt. Hon. R. G. Casey, in a public address the other day, gave about as clear a definition of the Allied objective in the war as any that has been vouchsafed.

Australians, as citizens of an independent unit of the British empire, bound to it only by a common sovereign and a common ideal of living, believe that recent history shows the leaders of present-day Germany mean, "by fair means or foul, to extend their power without pity and without limit; that they are prosecuting a "carefully thought out and extremely well-prepared attempt to overturn the entire world order—a general clean-up aimed at making Germany, once and for all, the dominant force in the world—and that the coldly calculated attempt is only limited by opportunity and is to be carried through with fire and sword aided by treachery and bribery from within."

Thus, Casey said, Australians believe that "a destructive force has arisen which threatens the whole basis of world civilization as we have known it," which has to be defeated; that "the leaders of the German nation today have outraged the fundamental principles which make life of this earth possible"; that the rules of decency should be observed; that "a man who kicks to death some small helpless individual is a cur"; and that constructive ability, not destruction, should be the criterion of success.

Australians have no material aims in this war, Casey noted, but have the greater aim—"that of retaining our freedom and independence—the right to pass on to our children the privilege of calling themselves Australians and to control our own destinies and to govern ourselves as we think fit and proper." A sufficient aim, indeed, which, however, does not accord with the Nazi idea of aggression. But the Australians are backing it up in a substantial way.

Casey noted that, in addition to providing a substantial navy, Australia is manufacturing airplanes, guns, shells, machine guns, and indeed all types of munitions in Australia in great quantities; is training and sending overseas an army corps of three divisions besides having five or six divisions on a war footing in Australia, and has in training, besides an air force for home defense the first contingents of what will eventually be a force of 50,000 air pilots, observers, gunners and radio operators.

It is difficult to imagine that a people with a faith like this can ever suffer themselves to go down to defeat.

Willkie Candidacy Gets Remarkable Headway

ONE of the most remarkable developments in the American political field is the way in which the spontaneous drive for the nomination of Wendell Willkie for the presidency has spread throughout the country.

Volunteer groups supporting the Willkie candidacy report that "Willkie for President" clubs are springing up all over the country at the rate of approximately eight a day and that Willkie petitions are being signed in a steadily mounting tide. K. B. Emmons, secretary of the Volunteer Mailing Committee for Distributing Willkie speeches, situated in the Murray Hill hotel in New York city, states that more than thirty states now have organized Willkie clubs.

Here is an extraordinary case of the old saw about the office seeking the man rather than the man the office. Willkie had no idea of being a presidential candidate and was amazed when he was drafted as such by admiring friends. Written articles and speeches gave evidence of his capacity for the job along with his background of energetic industrial leadership, however, and his candidacy, generally regarded at the outset as hopeless, will be something to reckon with when the Republican national convention is held.

The chateau of P. G. Wodehouse, famed British humorist who created the world's most noted fictional valet, is reported in a French area overrun by Germans. "Jeeves, do not show them in."

The United States invented the airplane, the machine gun, the submarine and the principle of the tank. Maybe we should have taken out patents.

Congress is beginning to talk taxes. Taxpayers should be calm at this time, however. The big tax blitzkrieg will come next year.

The Browser's Findings

By MARSHALL MASLIN

Author John W. Vandercook fell in love with an empress who lived more than fifteen centuries ago and the result is "Empress of the Dusk" (Reynal & Hitchcock).

Marshall Maslin

The lady is Theodora of Byzantium, ancient Constantinople, and Mr. Vandercook had to do much guessing and reconstructing. He begins with this paragraph: "In the year 500 the world seemed old. Rome had failed. The giant state that for four centuries had ruled the earth had been built upon too vast a plan. It was now crumbling. . . The long play seemed drawing to a close and the leading actors had already gone.

But in the East, where aging Rome had come, seeking sun to comfort its senility, one could still be young. And the young, when they have courage, forget their world is dying. A girl of the streets for a time became the Empress. Because she had valor and beauty and pride, the fire of Imperial splendor flared once more before, forever, it guttered and went out."

The tale that Vandercook tells is thrilling, and Theodora's dramatic rise to power could have occurred only in a disintegrating civilization. Vandercook admits that Procopius of Caesarea, who is the standard authority on Theodora, is worthless because he hated this girl who achieved joint rule with Justinian over the Roman Empire. He is therefore compelled to prune Procopius and invent details of her life as a street girl, prostitute, dancer, actress and wanderer on the shores of the Mediterranean.

Most of the historians agree that the Emperor Justinian was weak, but Vandercook makes him strong except for the one weak moment when revolt broke up from the street mobs and he would have fled had not Theodora stood firm and merciless. The book has its weak spots, but one respect Mr. Vandercook has achieved memorable clarity—he gives us a startling picture of the savage, immoral, headless and scrabbling people of Byzantium.

Also, the Browser thinks the author had his eye on the present rather than on the past in those pages where he writes of the Huns and Germans. For example: "The barbarians of the German forests loved war for its own sake. They still thought of it as noble. . . There was no more conspicuous fact in history than that a treaty with the Germans was worthless. . . The General Germanicus, after a lifetime of experience with them, had come to the bitter conclusion that all agreements with them were waste paper and that there could be no real peace in Europe until they were utterly destroyed."

Johan Fabricius, whose "Son of Marietta" was a best seller four years ago, has spent the years since then in writing "A Castle in Carinthia" (Random House), a rich chronicle of a noble Austrian family. It begins in the decade before the first World War, when society seemed secure and common life safe for all. It ends in the middle twenties, when the people of the castle of the Weygands seem to have achieved a new stability. Wise, sensitive and understanding, a good book that deserves thoughtful appreciation. And it should not go unnoticed even in these perilous times.

BOOK ENDS: Could you write a book-length personal history of some significant aspect of American life for a prize of $2,500? Then write to the Life-in-America editor of Houghton Mifflin Company, 2 Park street, Boston, for details. . . Viking Press has printed 33,000 copies of Upton Sinclair's "World's End", exclusive of Literary Guild copies, one month before publication date. . . Hans Zinsser's "As I Remember Him: the Biography of R. S." has been postponed until June 25. It's a delightful life of a doctor, written with humor and authority. "R. S." is "H. Z." (with modifications) thinks Marsh Maslin.

Institute Gets Report on Queer Jungle Ant Tree

Edwin C. Hill

O. L. Haught, oil geologist and explorer in eastern Colombia, turns in to the Smithsonian Institution an account of something that suggests a Trojan tree. It is an ant tree, known as the barvasanta, and it is involved in what appears to be a thoroughly unscrupulous conspiracy between the animal and vegetable kindgdoms. That doesn't sound reasonable, but is there anything now which does sound reasonable? We ask you.

The collusive villainies of the tree and the ants are set forth as follows:

This tree is slender, graceful and beautiful, about thirty feet high, one of the showiest trees in the jungle. It has large and extraordinarily beautiful red flowers. These fascinating flowers were a lure to white men until they learned better. Both trunk and branches of this tree are hollow, as if the job had been done by a good plumber with copper tubing, and they provide a perfect fortress and supply base for the ants. The garrison within is made of a tribe of singularly vicious and savage ants, inflicting bites both dangerous and painful. The slightest disturbance to the tree brings them charging forth in full panoply. Indians and white men have learned to circle a long way around the enticing barrasanta. Thus left alone, the tree advances through the jungle.

Mr. Haught suggests a fifty-fifty arrangement — the tree providing barracks for the advancing ants and the ants doing battle to protect the advancing tree.

Noted by Scientists

I believe insect-plant association, in which survival interests are pooled, has been noted by scientists in many instances. However, they disclose novel defense techniques as well as occasional collusion.

Mr. Haught describes the mountainous anthills in the llanos region of western Colombia. These energetic and ruthless ants are "leaf cutters," and their neighborhood is denuded of vegetation—that is, almost denuded. There was one curious little shrub which went in for preparedness. It is in general appearance much like other shrubs and must have looked like a push-over to the big jungle ants when they started swarming over it. But were they surprised! As the ants attack they are caught, in a viscous, transparent juice, exuded all along the branches and trunk of the shrub. It is nothing less than glue and the ant would do just as well to step into an ant-size bear trap. He dies on the spot.

Avoided by Plant Life

The soil is exceptionally deep and rich in this llanos region. But plant life of all kinds avoids it. On these barren hummocks there are only two old settlers—the ants with their huge mounds and the smart little shrub which learned how to defend itself in the clinches. But elsewhere through the jungle there are many trees known as mymecophyls, or ant lovers. They made a deal and live on in joint outlawry with the predatory ants.

Mr. Haught turns in a tale of scientists studying flowers by airplane. So deep and dense is the jungle that the flowers have to migrate to the tree tops to get sun and air. The aviator, flying low over the tree tops, sees a magnificent blossoming garden beneath him.

Sluggish Are Written Off

We could cite several wise fabulists, starting with Aesop, as well as quite a few scientists, to gear this life urgency for survival to mundane affairs today. But that would be laboring a point. Obviously life gets by, and no doubt will keep on doing so by processes of adaptation and defense and the creature that is too sluggish for such adaptation is casually written off.

We saw an ant lugging across the terrace a bread crumb which had been tossed out for the birds. It was perhaps fifty times bigger than the ant but he heaved it along steadily. It took him perhaps fifteen minutes to get it across the terrace and then he entered the tall grass—jungle to him. I was determined to see what he would do with it.

The afternoon wore away as he worked perhaps fifty feet into the grass, performing prodigious feats of strength as he scrambled through with his burden. Finally he laid down the bread crumb, lay on his back, flexed his muscles, took a casual bite out of the crumb and started on a long trek back to the terrace again. It seemed silly, as most of our own highly particularized endeavors might seem to a higher intelligence. But perhaps there is design, pattern, meaning in it all. New Deal Whisper Squad Works Hard Trying To Postpone GOP Convention

By FRANKLYN WALTMAN

For several weeks the whisper squad of the Democratic National Committee and the New Deal palace guards have been setting off rumors to the effect that the Republicans intend to postpone their national convention, scheduled to start at Philadelphia on June 24.

Of course there is not a word of truth in these whispered rumors. But it is interesting to explore the reasons why the Democrats seem so anxious to have the Republican convention postponed. Obviously the New Dealers are attempting to bolster up the courage of their followers by this fanciful effort to make it appear that Republicans are uncertain of the course they wish to pursue.

But there is a more subtle purpose underneath these New Deal whispers. Actually the New Deal whispers are based on wishful thinking. If the Republican convention could be postponed that would give the New Dealers justification for postponing their convention—or perhaps calling it off altogether.

Democratic Convention Needless

Indeed, there is no genuine reason why there should be a Democratic national convention this year. Just as in 1936, the duly elected delegates will be nothing more than stooges—window dressing, if you please—for giving a semblance of legality to plans determined by the White House. Mr. Roosevelts' patronage machine, with billions from the Treasury, already has made certain his iron-fisted control of the convention. Thus he is able to renominate himself for the unprecedented third term, to dictate his running mate and to write any kind of platform he desires.

If proof of this contention were needed, it is given to us by John O'Donnell and Doris Fleeson, the Washington correspondents of the New Deal New York Daily News. These two correspondents are great admirers of Mr. Roosevelt and the New Deal. They frequently reflect the thinking that goes on in the White House's inner circle.

This is what they have just reported to their newspapers:

"Franklin D. Roosevelt of Hyde Park, N. Y., and James Francis Byrnes of Spartansburg, S. C., will be named by acclamation to head the Democratic ticket when the delegates assemble for their national convention in Chicago during the week of July 15.

"The nominations will be first-ballot, New Deal blitzkrieg! Orders for the political panzertroopen of the regimented faithful have been worked out to the final detail—even to the new marching song. Mr. Roosevelt's old 'Happy Days Are Here Again,' has been ditched because of the international situation, and gives way in the '40 campaign to the lilting 'Franklin D. Roosevelt Jones.'"

To Accept Nomination by Telephone

This pair of New Deal writers further report that arrangements have been made for the president to accept his unanimous nomination by long distance telephone, speaking from the White House!

Acceptance of the nomination by long distance telephone would certainly be the appropriate ending of such a "New Deal blitzkrieg." It would mark Mr. Roosevelt's deserved contempt for what Miss Fleeson and Mr. O'Donnell term the "political panzertroopen of the regimented faithful."

But why should tht delegates to the Democratic national convention waste time and money even going to Chicago, in view of the program already worked out for them aboard Mr. Roosevelt's yacht. It would appear from the O'Donnell-Fleeson story that no dissenting voice must be by acclamation, why should not the delegates be permitted to send postal cards marked in big letters with the word "JA." That is the way Hitler does it.

Master and Servant

New Jersey Man Says People of America Must Wake Up

Editor The Cumberland News:

When the servant dons the clothes of the master, and pretends to be the master, he begins to think that he is the master, and acts accordingly.

This is true in many walks of life, and especially so in matters of government.

When the president of the United States forgets that he is the servant of all the people, and attempts to become their master, the least punishment that he deserves is removal from office.

When members of Congress forget that they are public servants, and pass legislation or appropriate money to benefit minority pressure groups to the disadvantage of the people as a whole, they are assuming the role of master, and the least punishment that they deserve is rejection at the polls.

When teachers in public schools forget that they are employed to assist parents in educating their children, and presume to inculcate in the minds of the children political doctrines and theories foreign to the beliefs and policies of the parents of the children, these teachers are assuming the role of master and the least punishment they deserve is dismissal.

How much longer will the people of this country continue to slumber and sleep? Wake up America!

Quotable Quotes

By William Moulton Marston, Distinguished Psychologist, in the Rotarian Magazine

Today, more than ever, concentration is essential to the full enjoyment of pleasures or to effective work. This is an age of distraction, with interruptions by phone, by friends, by noise, by scares, and by our own flightiness. Increasingly work must be done under conditions which are inhospitable to concentration, yet on concentration depends, more and more, a man's success in this specialized world.

A Great Problem Faces Humanity

From the Cincinnati Enquirer

It may be that the more spectacular sufferings of the war refugees in France and England are eased for the moment, though even yet the highways still are filled with the pitiful cavalcade of old men, women and children in desperate search of shelter, food and safety.

But the American public should need no daily account of the machine-gunning and the blasting of refugees to know that the question of their care is one of the greatest problems which has faced humanity in at least a quarter of a century.

The facts are indisputable. It is not a matter of propaganda or of conjecture that there are many hundreds of thousands of people who need our help in the refugee centers of France and England. They are there, visibly deprived of all their possessions except what they have managed to carry on their backs, visibly in need of food and shelter, and in many instances visibly in want of medical attention.

In France and England there is no insensibility to the needs of these people. But they are nations at war, fighting for their existence. They have neither the means nor the time to minister to the refugees' needs in full. There is very little we can do about the European war. But we can do this.

We can buy up and send overseas some of our surplus stocks of foods and other commodities, as our share in the humanitarian task. We can see that there is no epidemic of disease for want of medical supplies among the army of refugees. In general, we can relieve somewhat the burden of misery and sorrow which has fallen overnight upon the backs of millions of innocent people.

But we cannot accomplish this merely by wishing it done. Each of us must help some, each to the extent of his ability. The American Red Cross will translate your contribution into mercy for the refugees. Send your share today to the Red Cross.

Amendment Is Not Enough

From the Cincinnati Times-Star

The La Follette Civil Liberties bill passed the Senate and was sent to the House considerably altered from its original form. Originally the bill forbade the use of "oppressive labor practices" by employers in interstate commerce, including the use of strike-breakers and spies in labor disputes and the possession of firearms of tear gas. All these provisions are retained. The bill has been changed, however, to permit employers to obtain information about the political or economic views of employes or prospective employes. A more radical amendment by Senator Reynolds forbids the hiring of Communists or Nazi Bund members under penalty of $10,000 fine and five years in prison.

The purpose of the Reynolds amendment — to prevent fifth-column activities in plants vital to the national defense—is, of course, excellent. But employers are given the power to carry it out. They may seek information about the political or economic views of employes, but how? Obviously, no worker will admit that he is a Communist or Nazi Bund member. To protect themselves against heavy penalties, employers will have to hire investigators. But if a labor dispute is on and a Communist or bund in a plant could easily provoke one—the investigators might be regarded as labor spies and employers would then fall afoul of the law.

The La Follette bill, with its invitation to sabotage in munition plants, was bad enough in the first place. As amended it is even worse. It imposes heavy new obligations on employers without giving them the power to meet those obligations. Amendment is not what this bill needs. It needs killing.

ARTIST'S LIFE

About Three People Who Vowed They Would Never Change, and Two People Who Proved It Was a Lie

By ELIZABETH BUCK

The hour was agreeably late, the refreshments both liquid and potent, and a goodly crowd was there, that last night in Charlie Roncevaux's barny garret studio over on the fringe of the North Side. I was hating to leave it, that gay, care-free life wherein the tag-line "Life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness" had a Bohemian connotation all its own.

"I hate to leave you, Charlie," I bemoaned, linking one arm through his and setting down by glass to clutch Elline from a near-by chattering group. We three had been good friends. "Every time you paint Elline here for one of your lousy magazine ads, think of me, slaving away in the far fields of journalism, away from life and fun. It makes me sad to contemplate it!"

"Keep the old chin up, sport," Elline laughed. She was teetering on the edge of a nervous outbreak after a heavy day of posing for Charlie. "We three will never change. Any time your yellow paper lets you come back, we'll take up where we left off. We're all young yet and full of zip, aren't we, Charlie?"

"You said it, kid," he affirmed, "we'll never change."

After that night, which ended on a note of sunlight filtering weakly through mists of bad liquor and the smoke-slits of the trainshed at the Union Depot, I often thought of the swell guys those two were, Elline and Charlie. For 10 years and more after I left them standing there with wistful looks on their bleary-eyed faces and took the fast train east, I occasionally thought of them.

Charlies was a genius of sorts, and a clever painter. Dropping into the press club at Madrid or buying an American magazine at a little shop in Cairo or opening an occasional foreign publication, I would every once in a while find one of Charlie's unmistakable creations staring me in the face, and I would stop long enough to think of him. Elline's face or figure used to be in most of the early pictures, but after a while there was a succession of new models.

"I knew it would happen like that," I told myself. "Elline is a spitfire and maybe a little cracked. Charlie is too much like her not to have a splitup—and I'll bet there were plenty of fireworks when it happened!"

I always meant to sit down and dash off a letter to either Charlie or Elline, but somehow I didn't. Then finally things quieted down in my line and I got a cable from my paper telling me to come on home and park my carcass on a nice, soft office job until I was pensioned off or something stirring broke.

And so I was calling on Charlie. "Mr. Roncevaux is busy downtown," the trim maid told me when I had hunted up Charlie's address and took a cab to his place. I didn't telephone because I wanted to surprise him. Instead, I was surprised—at the swank appointments of his apartment, at his evidence of having been too, too successful. "May I announce you to Mrs. Roncevaux?"

"You may as well," I agreed, before I had time to think about it. I probably would spend a half hour or so with a strange dame until Charlie came home, but maybe that was better than waiting and twiddling my thumbs, I almost fell off the chair in the drawing room when Elline walked in.

"Don't tell me you and Charlie really got married!" I exclaimed in surprise and delight. "Why didn't you let me know?" Elline smiled at me, but it was the kind of smile that she might have given to a complete stranger, which is probably what I seemed to her at that.

"We were so very busy," she said. "You see, with Charles branching out into a new line of poster and illustration work, we didn't even have a party with the old crowd. We weren't in the habit of associating with them much anyway, by the time—by the time we were married."

"I see," I said, but I didn't see then. "Well, I wondered about Charlier's using other models, because I knew he had sort of sworn that the day he couldn't have you to paint he'd get a job carrying a hod. Remember?"

Elline grinned politely. "But that was so long ago! We were young and said wild things. Charles is very busy now and quite at the head of his field. I haven't modeled for years now. I have quite a number of duties, taking care of Charles' home for him. We have a 6-year-old boy, you know."

"Well, that's certainly fine," I complimented.

Fortunately Charlie came home then and we had the usual bout of backslapping and handshaking. But I could see that Charlie was not the old Charlie I had known. He ducked into the bedroom and reappeared in a dinner coat the first chance he got.

"This calls for a toast," he stipulated brightly, looking sideways at Elline, who had a maternal, worried look on her face. I could see that she was wondering just what influence I would have on her workaday husband. I had been no tame lamb in my day, I knew she was thinking. He caught her look.

"You don't mind if we drink it in grape juice, do you, old man?" he inquired a little uncomfortably. "I guess we haven't had any liquor in the house before the baby was born, and that reminds me, you must see him when he wakes up. I've got some sketches of him and Elline I made every once in a while as he was growing up. Great stuff."

The maid brought in the grape-juice, and we all stood around waiting for someone to begin, and feeling strange.

"Well, here's to the three of us . . . we never change, do we?"—Distribuaed by United Feature Syndicate.

Virginia Armories Closed to Public

RICHMOND, Va., June 7 (AP)—The State adjutant general's office today ordered the Virginia National Guard to close its thirty-three armories to the public and to post guards at the buildings.

The move was explained by Brigadier General S. Gardner Waller as a precautionary one, and apparently was in line with the general defense plan being worked out by an eleven-man council..

The order to the various national guard units said "the governor directs that all armories be closed to the public," but General Waller indicated that permission for their use for certain occasions could be obtained through the guard's headquarters here. The armories often are used for public banquets and similar affairs.

Under the order, caretakers will sleep in the armories and every precaution is to be taken to "protect the premises and property."

Little Pigs Have Their Day in Court

FREDERICK, Md., June 7. (AP)—These little pigs didn't go to market, but they had their day in court.

It seems that a late Frederick countian (names of all concerned withheld by officials) willed all livestock, with one exception, to a relative. The exception—a brood sow—was given to another heir.

When the County Orphans Court received inventory of the will, however, it was discovered that the "estate" had multiplied—the sow had given birth to a litter of pigs.

The heir who got the large share of the estate claimed the pigs. So did the one who received the sow. The court, after due deliberation, ruled in favor of the latter, and ordered distribution of the estate to proceed.

Scots Fight Hard In Shirt Sleeves

LONDON, June 7. (AP) — Tough Scots in the crack highland regiments of a famous British division in a sector of the Weygand line near Abbeville fought fiercely in their shirt sleeves today.

An official eye-witness account said the German penetrations had made it necessary to withdraw the line at certain places to positions several miles south of the Somme but that "every inch of ground is being combatted."

THE DAILY STORY

ARTIST'S LIFE

About Three People Who Vowed They Would Never Change, and Two People Who Proved It Was a Lie

By ELIZABETH BUCK

The hour was agreeably late, the refreshments both liquid and potent, and a goodly crowd was there, that last night in Charlie Roncevaux's barny garret studio over on the fringe of the North Side. I was hating to leave it, that gay, carefree life wherein the tag-line "Life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness" had a Bohemian connotation all its own.

"I hate to leave you, Charlie," I bemoaned, linking one arm through his and setting down by glass to clutch Elline from a near-by chattering group. We three had been good friends. "Every time you paint Elline here for one of your lousy magazine ads, think of me, slaving away in the far fields of journalism, away from life and fun. It makes me sad to contemplate it!"

"Keep the old chin up, sport," Elline laughed. She was teetering on the edge of a nervous outbreak after a heavy day of posing for Charlie. "We three will never change. Any time your yellow paper lets you come back, we'll take up where we left off. We're all young yet and full of zip, aren't we, Charlie?"

"You said it, kid," he affirmed, "we'll never change."

After that night, which ended on a note of sunlight filtering weakly through mists of bad liquor and the smoke-slits of the trainshed at the Union Depot, I often thought of the swell guys those two were, Elline and Charlie. Problem Parents The Jittery Type

"Your voice is high and shrill, you snap at your darling."

By SARA WINSLOW
AP Feature Service Writer

So children get on your nerves? They always have. Before you were married you never could stand to visit where there were children. Children meant noise and disorder and sticky hands on your good clothes. Children meant confusion.

Now that you have children of your own you've learned to love them, of course, but to you they still mean — confusion. You seldom say, "they get on my nerves," but along toward the end of a day you notice that your voice is high and shrill, you are likely to drop things, you keep looking at the clock, counting the minutes till bedtime. Along toward the end of the day, you're likely to snap and snarl at your little darling—even while you hate yourself for your meanness.

Yes, you, the jittery type, are a problem parent, indeed. You know all the rules for model parenthood, but you are just too nervous to abide by them. Well, first remember you have plenty of company. There's scarcely a parent who isn't the jittery type, at least part of the time.

Next, attack your problem directly. Find out just what makes you nervous and remedy the cause if you can. If it's noise, buy rubber-soled shoes for the children, install sound-proof walls, put cotton-and-wax plugs in your ears. If you find you can be a model parent during the early part of the day, while your illtemper asserts itself only late in the afternoon, your solution is simple. You need—must have—relief before your nervous breaking point occurs each day. Don't you know of another parent in your neighborhood who also is the jittery type? Strike a bargain with her. Tell her you'll take care of her children each morning, if she'll relieve you at the dangerous hour of 4 o'clock.

It won't take much to restore your nervous balance. Perhaps you'll stroll down the street and get a chocolate soda. Maybe you'll call on a childless friend! If somehow you manage to free yourself of your children for awhile each day, you'll come back to them a much sweeter, calmer, more lovable mother.

BARCLAY ON BRIDGE

"The Authority on Authorities"

NOT IN THE BOOKS

IF YOU lead against No Trump a suit which is so long you expect your partner to have no more than a singleton in it, you will usually fare better by leading some high honor, even if you don't hold honors in sequence. This is especially true when you have the ace and queen, with or without the 10. Leading a fourth-best in this case is likely to present the declarer a trick with the jack which he could not get if you opened one of the top honors. This is not to be found in the general run of bridge books, but it is a principle of play understood by some of the best players.

That same bidding, with one slight variation, occurred at another table of the duplicate game where this hand was dealt. In that instance, South bid only 2-No Trumps on his third turn, then North 3-Spades and South 3-No Trumps. At this first table South made his contract and later twitted the other declarer for failing.

"What lead did you get?" asked the beaten man. His tormentor answered "The six of hearts." That is the standard lead prescribed by the usual book from such a combination, but it made this contract easy for South. He took the trick with dummy's jack, scored three high spades, lost the club finesse, also lost to the heart A, won with the heart K, then ran four tricks in the minors.

At the other table West led the heart Q. With either this lead or the A, it is impossible for South to have more than one stopper in the suit, therefore no earthly way to keep from going down at least two tricks.

Problem Parents The Jittery Type

"Your voice is high and shrill, you snap at your darling."

6 baked tart shells
½ cup cream, whipped

Combine ⅓ cup strawberries, sugar, flour and salt. Boil gently 2 minutes. Cool. Add remaining 3½ cups strawberries to cooked fruit and mix carefully. Just before serving fill tart shells with fruit mixture. Top with whipped cream. Serves 6.

TART SHELLS

2¼ cups sifted all-purpose flour
1 teaspoon salt
⅔ cup Spry
6 tablespoons cold water (about)

Sift flour and salt together. Add ⅔ cup Spry and cut in until mixture is as fine as meal. Add remaining Spry and continue cutting until particles are size of navy bean. (Notice how easily Spry mixes.) Sprinkle water gradually over mixture. With a fork, work lightly into a dough. Roll dough ⅛-inch thick and prick with fork. Cut in 5-inch rounds to fit over outside of muffin pans. Fit dough snugly over pans, pinching into about 7 pleats. Bake in very hot oven (450°) 10 to 15 minutes. Makes 12 delicious, tender, flaky tart shells.

Such tender, flaky crust with Spry—lighter cakes, too

AND see how quickly they're mixed! Spry creams so easily. Spry's purer, too, and stays fresh longer. Here are three big extra advantages and only Spry gives all three! Change to Spry today for all baking and frying. Spry-fried foods are crisp, tasty, so digestible.

University Solons Take a Whack at the Obvious

BEATRICE FAIRFAX, Famous Authority on Problems of Love and Marriage — Distributed by King Features Syndicate, Inc.

Many worthy citizens must have ned me in a hearty laugh the er morning when we read of the dings of a certain university. sembled in solemn conclave, the iversity gravely discussed "Why Does Boy Love Girl?" or, contrariwise, "Why Does Girl Love Boy?"

Why didn't the learned professors turn their attentions to such riddles as "Why does a duck swim?" Or why do we eat when we are hungry? Or cease to breathe when we are shut up without air?

As boy has been loving girl ever since Eve persuaded Adam to rob the apple orchard, it's as plain as the nose on your face why boy loves girl, and girl loves boy—they're made that way.

Even before that first apple-raiding adventure on the part of Adam and Eve, girl and boy seem to have made out very well. Evidence in the Gobi Desert, China, and various parts of Europe where prehistoric skulls are found, demonstrates that girl and boy had got to the point of admiring, selecting and handing on their descendents for eons of time.

Do Their Bit

Still these worthy professors have done their bit in the particular university, which shall be nameless, where the discussion was held and the case histories of 300 engaged couples studied, "most of whom have since married" and submitted to psychological tests concerning that grand old engima under discussion.

Let's see what the professors have got to say about it and how it applies to our young friends Jim and Mamie. After being submitted to a battery of psychologists and calling in their friends for questioning, the professors arrived at the following facts:

It seems that "opposites", in spite of all that has been said, do not attract. If a boy is dull in his class work, he prefers a dull girl.

Cap and Gown Superfluous

That seems self-evident to us, so why put on cap and gown to discuss the truism that men do not care for the society of girls who make them feel inferior. Hence all the urging of this column for girls to learn how to be good listeners.

The professors traced the careers of 307 individuals who, in their school-days, were judged to be below average in intelligence. It was found that these persons didn't fare very well when it came to getting jobs, another self-evident truth which the rest of us have noted without having to don cap and gown.

But to return to the basic question, one doesn't have to take a Ph. D. to arrive at the solution. Girls and boys have loved each other and will continue to love each other as long as anything is left of this sorry old world with its "blitzkrieg" invasion of peaceful nations, where homes are wrecked and young men done to death.

The Georgia Federation of Women's clubs owns and operates Talullah Falls Industrial school, which was opened in 1909 with 21 pupils. Present enrollment is over 300. Thousands of boys and girls from remote mountain sections of the state have been graduated.

The states of Pennsylvania and Utah have protective legislation safeguarding public school teachers from dismissal for religious or political views.

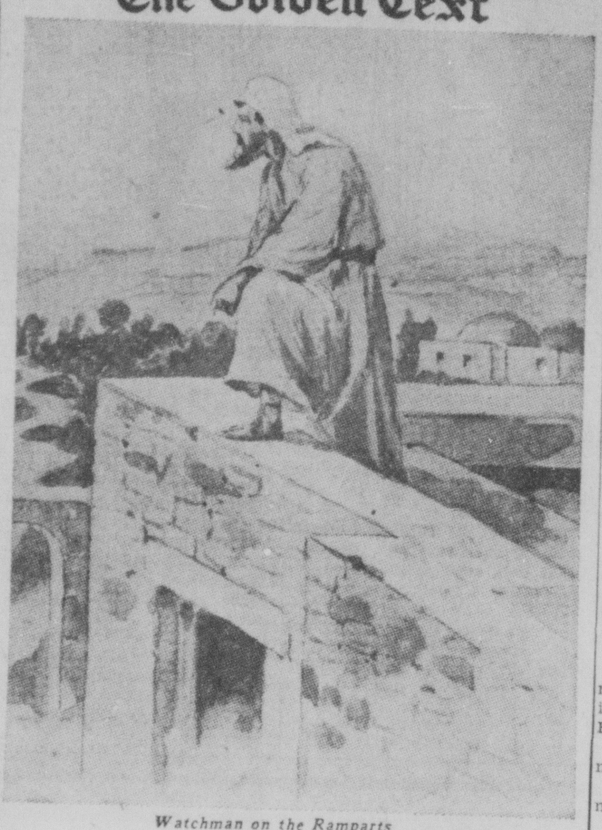
The Golden Text



Watchman on the Ramparts

"So then each one of us shall give account of himself to God."—Rom. 14:12.

Ezekiel Teaches Personal Responsibility

HIGHLIGHTS ON THE SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

By NEWMAN CAMPBELL

(The International Uniform Lesson on the above topic for June 9 is Ezekiel 33:1-20, the Golden Text being Rom. 14:12, "So then each one of us shall give account of himself to God.")

EZEKIEL, the prophet, and his people were in exile during the time he gave to them the message which is the subject of today's lesson. It was at Tel-abib, at the river Chebar, on a canal on the Euphrates river, near Nippur, in Babylon, in the year 586 B. C.

Ezekiel was married and had a house of his own. His wife died very suddenly, and the Lord told him he must not shed tears, and he must not eat the bread of man, but must speak to the people and warn them of what was coming—conquest and exile.

In our lesson he tries to impress upon his people in exile that they individually suffer for their own sins; that theirs is the responsibility for their actions, and if they repent and leave their evil ways, their sins will be forgiven and forgotten by God.

As a prophet he is a watchman appointed by the Lord Jehovah for his people, warning them of the dangers that are approaching. If the watchman on the ramparts sees an army approaching to destroy the city, he should sound his trumpet so that the people may be warned and flee or prepare to fight. If, however, the watchman sees the danger and does not blow his trumpet, and the enemy comes and takes the city, then the blood of the people is on the head of the watchman.

If Watchman Is Faithless

"So thou, O son of man (meaning himself), I have set thee a watchman unto the house of Israel; therefore thou shalt hear the word from My mouth, and warn them from Me."

If Ezekiel, like the faithless watchman on the ramparts, had failed to warn Israel of her sins, then he was responsible if the wicked "die in inquity." If such warning has been given, however, and the people refuse to listen to the prophet, it is their own fault that they repent not.

God has no pleasure in the death of the wicked. He would rather we turn away from sin and live. "Turn ye, turn ye from your evil ways; for why will ye die, O house of Israel?" Ezekiel pleads.

He makes it clear that hypocrisy will not help. If a man confess righteousness and still commits sin he will not be saved, but die. Only if he "turn from his sin, and do that which is lawful and right;

"If the wicked restore the pledge, give again that he had robbed, walk in the statutes of life, without committing iniquity; he shall surely live."

The Israelites were not at all inclined to listen to Ezekiel at this time. They thought the Lord was not fair and punished them without reason.

"Yet ye say, The way of the Lord is not equal," Ezekiel told them. "O ye house of Israel, I will judge you every one after his ways." Doesn't this accusation remind you of the blame which those who do wrong try to shift on everyone except themselves? Father, mother, friend, is to blame. Never themselves.

Soon after this, in the twelfth year of their captivity, a messenger escaped from Jerusalem and told them that their sacred city had been destroyed. Then Ezekiel said, "my mouth was opened and I was no more dumb."

From then on he could console and minister to his people, and build up their moral life because they would listen to him. His prediction that Jerusalem would fall had happened, and they would harken to a man whose prophecies came true.

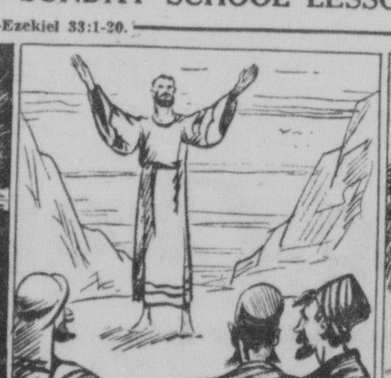
Ezekiel Teaches Responsibility — ILLUSTRATED SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON — By Alfred J. Buescher

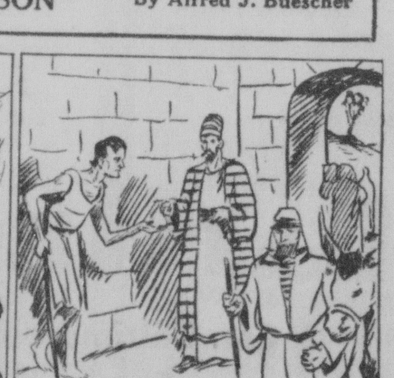
Scripture—Ezekiel 33:1-20.

A good watchman, when he sees danger threatening his people, will blow the trumpet and warn them, says Ezekiel.

But if the watchman blows not his trumpet, and the people are destroyed, their blood will be on his head.



"Turn ye, turn ye from your evil ways; for why will ye die, O house of Israel?" Ezekiel pleads.



"If the wicked turn from his wickedness and do that which is right, he shall live." (GOLDEN TEXT—Rom. 14:12)

SAYS WORKERS READY

William Green

President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor is pictured above as he arrived at the White House to pledge to President Roosevelt the support of his organization of the national defense program. Green told Roosevelt that between 200,000 and 300,000 highly skilled workers on the federation's rolls are unemployed and immediately available for necessary industrial expansion.

Crime Reaches Back to Crib, Educator Says

Better Homes and Education of Parenthood Needed Today

By GARRY C. MYERS, Ph. D.

To you and me it is gratifying to observe that the home is being rediscovered. More and more often, for example, we are reading and hearing from officials who administer public safety and justice that crime reaches back to the crib, that better citizenship will come with better homes, and that education in and for better parenthood holds the hope of checking and reducing juvenile delinquency and crime.

Last summer, at the Institute of Family Life at Dickinson College where I served as an instructor, I heard this point of view stressed by the head of the efficient state police force of Pennsylvania. For years I have read and heard it from the pen and lips of Carl Weygand, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Ohio. It has been coming forcefully in the writings and utterances of Walter Germain, Police Inspector in charge of crime prevention, of Saginaw, Michigan. And in the last few years, J. Edgar Hoover, director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, better known as Chief of the G-Men, has been hitting hard on home responsibility and home discipline in his public addresses.

Says Hoover

To quote from a recent address of his:

"The American home — presided over by you women of America — holds the key to many of our most perplexing problems. In preserving the security of the home, we safeguard the security of the nation."

Every father and mother in the land must train their children in decency, honesty and the sacredness of citizenship. There must be a reaffirmation of the sanctity of the home and greater diligence in the discharge of family responsibility.

"There must be reestablished in American youth a respect for lawful authority and truly American traditions. This must be done in the home which stills controls the education system in our democratic order. We need a re-dedication of old-fashioned discipline and less experimentation with unsound theories and unholy philosophies,—such as letting children do as they please when they are little."

Religion Will Help

Then Mr. Hoover goes on to say that return to religion ought to help. Again, I think he is right. To quote:

"The fact that some Americans lack moral fortitude does not mean that the Church has failed; on the contrary, it has not been given a chance. What we need today is a return to the principles of decency, honesty and charity among men. What we need is an inculcation of the moral lessons of the Ten Commandments, and The Sermon on the Mount, in the hearts and minds of all Americans.

"This is the surest antidote for the poison of lawlessness. It is indeed a national disgrace that twelve percent of all murders, twenty-nine percent of all robbers, thirty-three percent of all thieves, forty-six percent of all burglars and fifty-four percent of all automobile thieves are under voting age."

And J. Edgar Hoover, might properly have added: "Crime, like religion, really begins at home."

Cambridge To Have State Laboratory

CAMBRIDGE, Md., June 7. (AP)—A move was under way here today to establish a state department of health laboratory in Cambridge.

If successful, it will be the third such institution on the eastern shore, a committee of the Dorchester County Medical Society, which is sponsoring the move, said.

The state board of health laboratories makes tests to indicate presence of communicable diseases, and examines water and milk supplies in given areas. The two such laboratories now operating on the eastern shore are at Salisbury and Jurlock.

SYNTHETIC RUBBER

Dr. Waldo L. Semon (left) who with his assistants is credited with the development of Ameripol, a new synthetic rubber described as capable of replacing natural rubber, makes a sample of the new product before a gathering in New York's Waldorf Astoria. He is aided by John L. Collyer, tire manufacturer.

Detective Answers Call, Finds Wife Robbed

ST. LOUIS, June 7. (AP)—Detective George Parker was cruising in a scout car when he was directed by radio to answer a complaint in the neighborhood.

Arriving at the scene, he was surprised to find his wife waving frantically and explaining a young man had snatched her purse.

Parker caught the robber and got back $46.50 — all that was left of his last week's pay check.

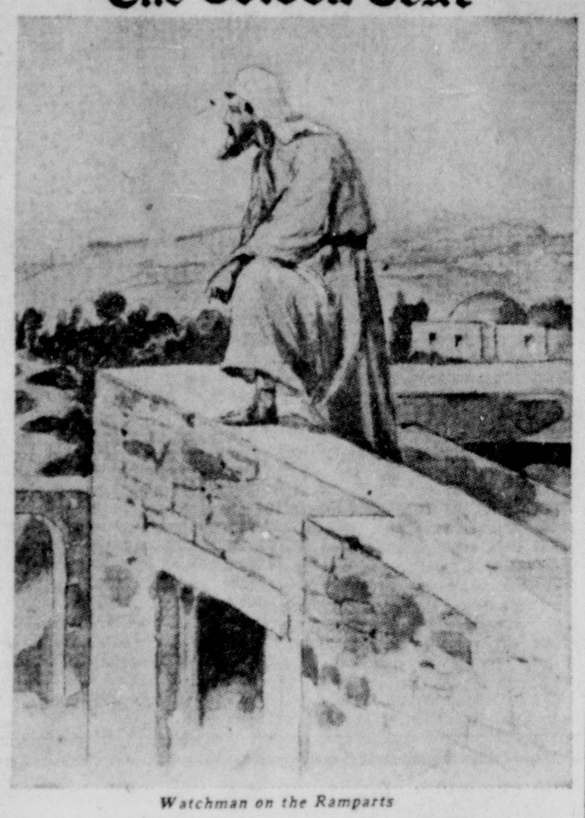
The Golden Text



Watchman on the Ramparts

"So then each one of us shall give account of himself to God."—Rom. 14:12.

Ezekiel Teaches Personal Responsibility

By NEWMAN CAMPBELL

(The International Uniform Lesson on the above topic for June 9 is Ezekiel 33:1-20, the Golden Text being Rom. 14:12, "So then each one of us shall give account of himself to God.")

EZEKIEL, the prophet, and his people were in exile during the time he gave to them the message which is the subject of today's lesson. It was at Tel-abib, at the river Chebar, on a canal on the Euphrates river, near Nippur, in Babylon, in the year 586 B. C.

Ezekiel was married and had a house of his own. His wife died very suddenly, and the Lord told him he must not shed tears, and he must not eat the bread of man, but must speak to the people and warn them of what was coming—conquest and exile.

In our lesson he tries to impress upon his people in exile that they individually suffer for their own sins; that theirs is the responsibility for their actions, and if they repent and leave their evil ways, their sins will be forgiven and forgotten by God.

As a prophet he is a watchman appointed by the Lord Jehovah for his people, warning them of the dangers that are approaching. If the watchman on the ramparts sees an army approaching to destroy the city, he should sound his trumpet so that the people may be warned and flee or prepare to fight. If, however, the watchman sees the danger and does not blow his trumpet, and the enemy comes and takes the city, then the blood of the people is on the head of the watchman.

If Watchman Is Faithless

"So thou, O son of man (meaning himself), I have set thee a watchman unto the house of Israel; therefore thou shalt hear the word from My mouth, and warn them from Me."

If Ezekiel, like the faithless failed to warn Israel of her sins, then he was responsible if the wicked "die in inquity." If such warning has been given, however, and the people refuse to listen to the prophet, it is their own fault that they repent not.

watchman on the ramparts, had God has no pleasure in the death of the wicked. He would rather we turn away from sin and live. "Turn ye, turn ye from your evil ways; for why will ye die, O house of Israel?" Ezekiel pleads.

He makes it clear that hypocrisy will not help. If a man profess righteousness and still commits sin he will not be saved, but die. Only if he "turn from his sin, and do that which is lawful and right;

"If the wicked restore the pledge, give again that he had robbed, walk in the statutes of life, without committing iniquity; he shall surely live."

The Israelites were not at all inclined to listen to Ezekiel at this time. They thought the Lord was not fair and punished them without reason.

"Yet ye say, The way of the Lord is not equal," Ezekiel told them. "O ye house of Israel, I will judge you every one after his ways." Doesn't this accusation remind you of the blame which those who do wrong try to shift on everyone except themselves? Father, mother, friend, is to blame. Never themselves.

Soon after this, in the twelfth year of their captivity, a messenger escaped from Jerusalem and told them that their sacred city had been destroyed. Then Ezekiel said, "my mouth was opened and I was no more dumb."

From then on he could console and minister to his people, and build up their moral life because they would listen to him. His prediction that Jerusalem would fall had happened, and they would harken to a man whose prophecies came true.

Ezekiel Teaches Responsibility — ILLUSTRATED SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON — By Alfred J. Buescher

Scripture—Ezekiel 33:1-20.

A good watchman, when he sees danger threatening his people, will blow the trumpet and warn them, says Ezekiel.

But if the watchman blows not his trumpet, and the people are destroyed, their blood will be on his head.

"Turn ye, turn ye from your evil ways; for why will ye die, O house of Israel?" Ezekiel pleads.

"If the wicked turn from his wickedness and do that which is right, he shall live." (GOLDEN TEXT—Rom. 14:12)

William Green

President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor is pictured above as he arrived at the White House to pledge to President Roosevelt the support of his organization of the national defense program. Green told Roosevelt that between 200,000 and 300,000 highly skilled workers on the federation's rolls are unemployed and immediately available for necessary industrial expansion.

Crime Reaches Back to Crib, Educator Says

By GARRY C. MYERS, Ph. D.

To you and me it is gratifying to observe that the home is being rediscovered. More and more often, for example, we are reading and hearing from officials who administer public safety and justice that crime reaches back to the crib, that better citizenship will come with better homes, and that education in and for better parenthood is the hope of checking and reducing juvenile delinquency and crime.

Last summer, at the Institute of Family Life at Dickinson College where I served as an instructor, I heard this point of view stressed by the head of the efficient state police force of Pennsylvania. For years I have read and heard it from the pen and lips of Carl Weygand, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Ohio. It has been coming forcefully in the writings and utterances of Walter Germain, Police Inspector in charge of crime prevention, Saginaw, Michigan. And in the last few years, J. Edgar Hoover, director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, better known as Chief of the G-Men, has been hitting hard on home responsibility and home discipline in his public addresses.

Says Hoover

To quote from a recent address of his:

"The American home — presided over by you women of America—holds the key to many of our most perplexing problems. In preserving the security of the home, we safeguard the security of the nation.

Every father and mother in the land must train their children in decency, honesty and the sacredness of citizenship. There must be a reaffirmation of the sanctity of the home and greater diligence in the discharge of family responsibility.

"There must be reestablished in American youth a respect for lawful authority and truly American traditions. This must be done in the home which stills controls the education system in our democratic order. We need a re-dedication of old-fashioned discipline and less experimentation with unsound theories and unholy philosophies,—such as letting children do as they please when they are little."

Religion Will Help

Then Mr. Hoover goes on to say that return to religion ought to help. Again, I think he is right. To quote:

"The fact that some Americans lack moral fortitude does not mean that the Church has failed; on the contrary, it has not been given a chance. What we need today is a return to the principles of decency, honesty and charity among men. What we need is an inculcation of the moral lessons of the Ten Commandments, and The Sermon on the Mount, in the hearts and minds of all Americans.

"This is the surest antidote for the poison of lawlessness. It is indeed a national disgrace that twelve percent of all murders, twenty-nine percent of all robbers, thirty-three percent of all thieves, forty-six percent of all burglars and fifty-four percent of all automobile thieves are under voting age."

And J. Edgar Hoover, might properly have added: "Crime, like religion, really begins at home."

In the usual manner, you may receive without cost, my reprint of a magazine article, "Do you spank your child?"

Cambridge To Have State Laboratory

CAMBRIDGE, Md., June 7. (AP)—A move was under way here today to establish a state department of health laboratory in Cambridge.

If successful, it will be the third such institution on the eastern shore, a committee of the Dorchester County Medical Society, which is sponsoring the move, said.

The state board of health laboratories makes tests to indicate presence of communicable diseases, and examines water and milk supplies in given areas. The two state laboratories now operating on the eastern shore are at Salisbury and Jurlock.

Detective Answers Call, Finds Wife Robbed

ST. LOUIS, June 7. (AP)—Detective George Parker was cruising in a scout car when he was directed by radio to answer a complaint in the neighborhood.

Arriving at the scene, he was surprised to find his wife waving frantically and explaining a young man had snatched her purse.

Parker caught the robber and got back $46.50 — all that was left of his last week's pay check.

The footprints of what were probably the largest animals to inhabit the earth were recently discovered in limestone deposits in Bandara County, Texas. The prints were made 120,000,000 years ago by the Sauropod Dinosaur.

The National Save-a-Life League, established in 1906 in New York, has as its object the dissuading of would-be suicides from taking their own lives.

Dr. Waldo L. Semon (left) who with his assistants is credited with the development of Ameripol, a new synthetic rubber described as capable of replacing natural rubber, makes a sample of the new product before a gathering in New York's Waldorf Astoria. He is aided by John L. Collyer, tire manufacturer.

Republicans Re-name Kay As Chairman

Miss Madalyn Bazzle, of Keyser, Is Selected as Associate Chairman

CHARLESTON, W. Va., June 7 (AP) — The Republican State Committee, unanimous on the retention of Robert H. C. Kay as state chairman, settled a good-natured contest today with the selection of Miss Madalyn Bazzle of Keyser as associate chairman.

There apparently was no thought of going against the personal choice of the party's nominees for any post — and personalities did not enter into it — the controversy being an argument over the right of the women members to caucus and name the officer themselves.

Thomas E. Dewey of New York, a candidate for the party's presidential nomination, was accorded an enthusiastic reception by the sixty-four committee members and about 15 onlookers in an informal talk.

The endorsement of Miss Bazzle came after much bickering — and a few voiced dissents. Her name was reported by a sub-group which was under instruction to confer with Mayor D. Boone Dawson of Charleston, the gubernatorial nominee, and Thomas Sweeney, the candidate for the U. S. Senate.

Miss Bazzle succeeds Mrs. Chauncey D. Hinerman of Cameron, whom one woman speaker declared was not a candidate for reelection because she now is the nominee for secretary of state.

Carl O. Schmidt of Wheeling was named vice chairman; Mrs. Andrews Northcott of Le Sage, secretary; and E. H. Tutwiler of Mount Hope, reelected treasurer.

Charleston was chosen for the state convention site, and the 1,694 delegates will come here on August 14 to select two nominees for the State Supreme court and to draft a platform.

Kay was authorized — with the advice of the nominees—to appoint a platform committee in advance of the convention, to consist of not less than seven and not more than fifteen members.

Dewey told the group:

"This is no campaign this year. It is a crusade of competency against incompentency."

He declared the country was suffering from "fraudulent leadership" and asserted that the one way to safeguard the future was to bring to Washington "an administration with a sense of leadership."

Discussing visits to thirty-two states, Dewey asserted that the "Republican party is way ahead in public sentiment than on the election day when it took the state over" in Republican-controlled commonwealths.

New Swimming Pool Will Open Soon

The new swimming pool at Lost River State Park will be open to the public within ten days, officials of the park announced Monday. The new pool, which has been under construction for the past year by CCC boys from Camp Hardy at Mathias, is the only swimming pool in this section. A new filtration plant has just been installed, capable of a complete change of water every eight hours. An inspector from Charleston with the Conservation Commission will check the pool this week for final approval.

The bath houses are still under construction but temporary dressing rooms will be provided. In addition to the swimming pool a recreation area has been finished including tennis courts, volley ball courts, badminton courts, a wading pool for children and a huge sand pile, croquet courses and mechanical swings for children. Bicycles are available for a modest fee. The original plans for the park included a stable of riding horses but park officials stated no confirmation had been received for the stable.

The pool and play area is constructed of native stone and this style of architecture is followed throughout the park. The new bath houses will be of this material.

The dining room and refreshment stand in the administration building has been leased for the season by Bryan Shobe of Petersburg and is managed by Miss Mary Halterman. The dining room opened Sunday. Breakfast, luncheon and dinners will be served to the public throughout the season. Miss Halterman announced that the restaurant would specialize in chicken dinners.

Donations Needed

Contributions toward the $300 goal for Hardy county in the nation-wide Red Cross drive are slow coming into the Examiner office and to the county chairman, Mrs. W. J. Teets. Donations have been received from the following:

Dr. R. W. Love $5, Miss Ollie McKinny $2, Sam Barbe $2, Mrs. Minie Doman, Rock Oak $1, Mrs. R. E. Fisher $1, Floyd Brill $1, Mrs. George Wilkins, Mathias $1, Mrs. S. A. McCoy $1, Miss Matie Cloud Wood $1, Miss Annie Southerly $1, A friend 25c, Miss Mamie Alexander $1, Moorefield Woman's Club $5, Moorefield Lions Club $5.

The Hardy county Red Cross committee again emphasizes the need for citizens of this vicinity to realize that what they give to this cause may save a life. A contribution of money is certainly the least that America can do to save Europe's civilization.

Final Report

In the final report made by Mrs. W. J. Teets, county chairman of the Cancer Control movement, it was announced that a total of $29.40 had been contributed by Hardy county to this cause. The list of contributors follows:

E. W. Shanholtz, Paskel Thompson, M. Dasher, Miss Virginia Wood, F. C. Schmichel, Mrs. Lucile Smith, Mrs. S. A. McCoy, W. F. Friddle, L. B. McNeill, The Durgon Farm Woman's Club, the Lost River Woman's Club, the Moorefield Woman's Club, the Old Field's Farm Woman's Club, the American Legion, the citizens of Wardensville whose names were not reported.

Hichew Funeral

Funeral services were held Wednesday morning for William Hichew, one of Hardy county's few remaining slaves. If he had lived until August 15, he would have been eighty-eight-years-old. The Rev. Booze had charge of the service and internment was in the colored cemetery.

"Uncle Bill" was the son of Patty Ann and Joshua Hichew who belonged to Daniel McNeill. He was the last of seventeen children. His wife, Amelia Ford, died some years ago as have two daughters and one son. The third son, Rufus, has not been heard from for many years. He made his home with his granddaughter and her husband, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Ford.

Habeas Corpus Petition Denied by Judge Huster

The habeas corpus petition of a Baltimore man convicted of robbery in 1935 yesterday was turned down by Associate Judge William A. Huster on the grounds that he had no jurisdiction in the case.

George A. Guest, sentenced to six years in the Maryland Penitentiary in 1935, was brought to the county jail and was granted his hearing yesterday. Guest claimed the Welfare board had deprived him of time off his sentence which was due him.

Judge Huster said the question involved was solely within the jurisdiction of the Welfare Board. The prisoner was remanded to the Maryland penitentiary.

500,000 Gallons of Water Pumped Into City Pool for Opening Sunday

Reappointment of Nestor Licot and Robert Metz as life guards at the Constitution Park swimming pool for the 1940 season, which opens tomorrow, was announced yesterday by Mayor Harry Irvine.

New Deal Called "Sixth Column" by New York Banker

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, W. VA., June 7, (AP)—Private capital is available in more than sufficient amount to finance factory expansion for defense purposes, Allan D. Pope said today while warning West Virginia bankers of a governmental "sixth column" aimed at private enterprise.

Pope, former president of the Investment Bankers Association and now president of the First of Boston Corp., New York, speaking at the Bankers' convention said:

"Manufacturers know as well as bankers that there are billions of available credit in banks, insurance companies, savings institutions, industrial corporations and among individuals to undertake this vast temporary expansion of industry to furnish airplanes, tanks, guns and other materials of war together with tools and machinery by which they are made."

He charged that use of public funds to purchase or control manufacturing plants would be a "sixth column" threat to private enterprise.

Hayes Picklesimer of Charleston, retiring president, said in an address that not only domestic problems but those arising from the rearmament program "can be solved if those charged with administering the affairs of our government will cease to engender class hatred and seek to encourage business."

Picklesimer brought applause when he started that "it is not the visible enemy I fear among us. It is the invisible enemy, the fifth columnists who are working day and night to upset our systems, our balances and our peace."

Republicans Re-name Kay As Chairman

Miss Madalyn Bazzle, of Keyser, Is Selected as Associate Chairman

CHARLESTON, W. Va., June 7 (AP) — The Republican State Committee, unanimous on the retention of Robert H. C. Kay as state chairman, settled a good-natured contest today with the selection of Miss Madalyn Bazzle of Keyser as associate chairman.

There apparently was no thought of going against the personal choice of the party's nominees for any post — and personalities did not enter into it — the controversy being an argument over the right of the women members to caucus and name the officer themselves.

Thomas E. Dewey of New York, a candidate for the party's presidential nomination, was accorded an enthusiastic reception by the sixty-four committee members and about 15 onlookers in an informal talk.

The endorsement of Miss Bazzle came after much bickering — and a few voiced dissents. Her name was reported by a sub-group which was under instruction to confer with Mayor D. Boone Dawson of Charleston, the gubernatorial nominee, and Thomas Sweeney, the candidate for the U. S. Senate.

Miss Bazzle succeeds Mrs. Chauncey D. Hinerman of Cameron, whom one woman speaker declared was not a candidate for reelection because she now is the nominee for secretary of state.

Carl O. Schmidt of Wheeling was named vice chairman; Mrs. Andrews Northcott of Le Sage, secretary; and E. H. Tutwiler of Mount Hope, reelected treasurer.

Charleston was chosen for the state convention site, and the 1,694 delegates will come here on August 14 to select two nominees for the State Supreme court and to draft a platform.

Kay was authorized — with the advice of the nominees—to appoint a platform committee in advance of the convention, to consist of not less than seven and not more than fifteen members.

Dewey told the group:

"This is no campaign this year, it is a crusade of competency against incompentency."

He declared the country was suffering from "fraudulent leadership" and asserted that the one way to safeguard the future was to bring to Washington "an administration with a sense of leadership."

Discussing visits to thirty-two states, Dewey asserted that the "Republican party is way ahead in public sentiment than on the election day when it took the state over" in Republican-controlled commonwealths.

New Swimming Pool Will Open Soon

The new swimming pool at Lost River State Park will be open to the public within ten days, officials of the park announced Monday. The new pool, which has been under construction for the past year by CCC boys from Camp Hardy at Mathias, is the only swimming pool in this section. A new filtration plant has just been installed, capable of a complete change of water every eight hours. An inspector from Charleston with the Conservation Commission will check the pool this week for final approval.

The bath houses are still under construction but temporary dressing rooms will be provided. In addition to the swimming pool a recreation area has been finished including tennis courts, volley ball courts, badminton courts, a wading pool for children and a huge sand pile, croquet courses and mechanical swings for children. Bicycles are available for a modest fee. The original plans for the park included a stable of riding horses but park officials stated no confirmation had been received for the stable.

The pool and play area is constructed of native stone and this style of architecture is followed throughout the park. The new bath houses will be of this material.

The dining room and refreshment stand in the administration building has been leased for the season by Bryan Shobe of Petersburg and is managed by Miss Mary Halterman. The dining room opened Sunday. Breakfast, luncheon and dinners will be served to the public throughout the season. Miss Halterman announced that the restaurant would specialize in chicken dinners.

Donations Needed

Contributions toward the $300 goal for Hardy county in the nation-wide Red Cross drive are slow coming into the Examiner office and to the county chairman, Mrs. W. J. Teets. Donations have been received from the following:

Dr. R. W. Love $5, Miss Ollie McKinny $2, Sam Barbe $2, Mrs. Minie Doman, Rock Oak $1, Mrs. R. E. Fisher $1, Floyd Brill $1, Mrs. George Wilkins, Mathias $1, Mrs. S. A. McCoy $1, Miss Matie Cloud Wood $1, Miss Annie Southerly $1, A friend 25c, Miss Mamie Alexander $1, Moorefield Woman's Club $5, Moorefield Lions Club $5.

The Hardy county Red Cross committee again emphasizes the need for citizens of this vicinity to realize that what they give to this cause may save a life. A contribution of money is certainly the least that America can do to save Europe's civilization.

Final Report

In the final report made by Mrs. W. J. Teets, county chairman of the Cancer Control movement, it was announced that a total of $29.40 had been contributed by Hardy county to this cause. The list of contributors follows:

E. W. Shanholtz, Paskel Thompson, M. Dasher, Miss Virginia Wood, F. C. Schmichel, Mrs. Lucile Smith, Mrs. S. A. McCoy, W. F. Friddle, L. B. McNeill, The Durgon Farm Woman's Club, the Lost River Woman's Club, the Moorefield Woman's Club, the Old Field's Farm Woman's Club, the American Legion, the citizens of Wardensville whose names were not reported.

Hichew Funeral

Funeral services were held Wednesday morning for William Hichew, one of Hardy county's few remaining slaves. If he had lived until August 15, he would have been eighty-eight-years-old. The Rev. Booze had charge of the service and internment was in the colored cemetery.

"Uncle Bill" was the son of Patty Ann and Joshua Hichew who belonged to Daniel McNeill. He was the last of seventeen children. His wife, Amelia Ford, died some years ago as have two daughters and one son. The third son, Rufus, has not been heard from for many years. He made his home with his granddaughter and her husband, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Ford.

Habeas Corpus Petition Denied by Judge Huster

The habeas corpus petition of a Baltimore man convicted of robbery in 1935 yesterday was turned down by Associate Judge William A. Huster on the grounds that he had no jurisdiction in the case.

George A. Guest, sentenced to six years in the Maryland Penitentiary in 1935, was brought to the county jail and was granted his hearing yesterday. Guest claimed the Welfare board had deprived him of time off his sentence which was due him.

Judge Huster said the question involved was solely within the jurisdiction of the Welfare Board. The prisoner was remanded to the Maryland penitentiary.

500,000 Gallons of Water Pumped Into City Pool for Opening Sunday

Reappointment of Nestor Licot and Robert Metz as life guards at the Constitution Park swimming pool for the 1940 season, which opens tomorrow, was announced yesterday by Mayor Harry Irvine.

New Deal Called "Sixth Column" by New York Banker

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, W. VA., June 7, (AP)—Private capital is available in more than sufficient amount to finance factory expansion for defense purposes, Allan D. Pope said today while warning West Virginia bankers of a governmental "sixth column" aimed at private enterprise.

Pope, former president of the Investment Bankers Association and now president of the First of Boston Corp., New York, speaking at the Bankers' convention said:

"Manufacturers know as well as bankers that there are billions of available credit in banks, insurance companies, savings institutions, industrial corporations and among individuals to undertake this vast temporary expansion of industry to furnish airplanes, tanks, guns and other materials of war together with tools and machinery by which they are made."

He charged that use of public funds to purchase or control manufacturing plants would be a "sixth column" threat to private enterprise.

Hayes Picklesimer of Charleston, retiring president, said in an address that not only domestic problems but those arising from the rearmament program "can be solved if those charged with administering the affairs of our government will cease to engender class hatred and seek to encourage business."

Picklesimer brought applause when he started that "it is not the visible enemy I fear among us. It is the invisible enemy, the fifth columnists who are working day and night to upset our systems, our balances and our peace."

More Showers Are Expected With June Weddings

A fitting finale for the wedding repast is delicious orange blossom cake and coffee.

By LOUISE BENNETT WEAVER
AP Feature Service Writer

These are the days when friends are giving showers for their bride-to-be acquaintances.

Those are the kind of gatherings men like to fight shy of. They're gatherings, too, at which the bridegroom-to-be often is a forgotten man.

You can please the men and the bridegroom, if they are in on one of your showers, by making it a Pantry-Shelf affair—mena really do enjoy stocking a pantry—and by planning your refreshments for the masculine palate.

A sandwich bar is a healty idea. Fill a large table with all the making and trimming for sandwichess and let the guests help themselves. Set out generously-heaped plates of sliced tongue, ham, roast beef, bologna, several kinds of cheeses. Supply several kinds of breads and crackers. And provide pickles, olives, pickled onions, mustard, chili sauce and some other condiments. Fruits, cookies, or salted nuts for dessert, hot cocee or cold beer for beverage and you'll please any man.

If you want something a little more substantial, a salad—crab, shrimp, lobster or chicken, they're all tasty in the evening—with hot rolls or biscuits and jam—is delicious. For dessert, pass pineapple-orange sherbet or raspberry ice cream or a fancy frozen mold. Cake, of course, at least two kinds; chocolate and angel food are favorites. Serve coffee all through the menu and sign off with salted nuts and small fancy candies.

If your shower guests are all girls, you can be more frilly with your menu. Dainty sandwiches, fancy salads, frosted cakes, whipped cream desserts will be the order, then. A frozen fruit salad accompanied by cream cheese sandwiches is an effective and rather simple idea. Follow those with lime sherbet and small fsosted cakes.

Here are some general suggestions about showers that may be helpful:

Be sure that the kind of gifts you decide on will fit the bride's trousseau or new home.

Don't decide on gifts that will be so expensive they'll flatten the guests' pocketbooks.

Members of the bride's family don't give showers though relatives can do whatever they want.

Beauty Shower to replenish the bride's make-up kit is a practical idea and need not be expensive. Buy face and lipstick tissues, small powder puffs, manicure equipment, eye-brow pencil, small jars and bottles of her favorite creams and lotions.

A Household Help Shower is good, too. This can include an apple corer, grapefruit knife, strawberry huller, knife sharpener, memo pad and pencil, waxed paper, paper napkins and other small gargets needed in every kitchen.

ORANGE BLOSSOM CAKE

One-half cup butter or butter substitute, one cup sugar, two eggs, one and one-half cups pastry flour, one-quarter teaspoon baking powder, one-half cup orange juice, grated rind one orange.

Cream shortening, sugar and yolks of eggs. Add grated rind. Then sift dry ingredients together alternately with orange juice. Beat whites until stiff and fold into mixture. Bake about 25 minutes in a loaf tin in a moderate oven.

How To Test Oven Without Thermometer

If your cooking range has no thermostatic oven control, the next best thing is an oven thermometer placed on the middle shelf of the oven during baking. In lieu of an oven thermometer, this paper test will prove helpful:

Place a sheet of white, unglazed paper in the center of the heated oven. In a slow oven, the paper will turn a delicate brown in five minutes. A moderate oven will turn the paper a medium brown in the five-minute period, while a hot oven will turn it dark brown.

Unpeeled Garnish

Here is a tricky new fruit garnish that will put over hot or cold roasts, chops or broiled chickens: Cut unpeeled oranges one-eighth, crosswise slices. Marinate them an hour or longer in French dressing to cover. Drain, sprinkle with a little lemon juice and brown sugar and broil on both sides until brown—this will take about eight minutes. Baste twice with the drained off French dressing. Sprinkle lightly with finely chopped fresh mint leaves.

Removing Salt

Food that has received too much salt by mistake or accident can often be salvaged by a simple process. Place the salty food in a pot or pan and heat it until it steams freely. Stretch a clean cloth over the top of the container and sprinkle over it a tablespoon of flour. The flour will absorb some of the salt.

To Clean Spinach

Use warm water to loosen the dirt and sand from spinach, broccoli and asparagus. Then rinse thoroughly in cold water to freshen.

Fruit Bread Out Of the Ordinary

Dried figs, prunes, peaches, apricots or raisins added during the making of home-made bread will take that essential food quite out of the ordinary by increasing its tastiness, food value and keeping qualities. Nothing beyond the usual bread-making procedure is necessary except the addition of the fruit. Soak the fruit, chop it into small pieces, and then add it to the dough during the first mixing. Best results are obtained when enough fruit is added to make its flavor predominate.

Lady Fingers Can Be Prepared Easily

Though lady fingers are generally considered a "caterer's specialty," they are easily prepared at home to give an attractive touch to desserts. To make them, beat three egg whites until stiff and dry. Gradually sift in one-third cup powdered sugar, then add two egg yolks beaten until thick and lemon-colored, plus one-fourth teaspoon vanilla. Next fold in one-third cup flour sifted with one-eighth teaspoon salt.

Spread the resulting dough on paper-covered cooky sheet in strips about four inches long and one inch wide. Sprinkle with powdered sugar and bake eight minutes in moderate oven. Remove from pan immediately and cool.

Headed Vegetables

Soak cauliflower, whole lettuce heads, artichokes and brussels sprouts for 20 minutes in 4 cups of water with a tablespoon of vingar in it to remove dirt and draw out insects. Rinse the vegetables in cold water and cook as desired.

WRITTEN FOR AND RELEASED BY CENTRAL PRESS ASSOCIATION

CHAPTER THIRTY-ONE

GAYLE SMILED to herself. She realized that her position at the moment required a certain dignity, nevertheless she had to be practical, too.

"Jeremy," she began, "I don't believe it would be wise for us to ride more than an hour this first time. Do you?"

She implied that there might be other times, because she really meant that there should be. This horseback ride was the first "date" Jeremy had requested of her. Somehow she knew it was the first time he had ever asked a girl to go on a social event with him, and if he chose riding she had no intention of letting that advantage slip. She could use it, maybe, to make him take the initiative again.

"Why, ah, I hadn't thought, Gayle. It's a lovely morning, and—"

"Oh, isn't it? But the truth is, Jeremy, I am not used to riding. There are muscles and things, and I'd be crippling around. You won't think I'm a killjoy?"

"Oh, I say, Gayle, no! I never thought of that. I used to ride out west. I guess it would make us sore. I never thought—ha, ha! Sure. Sure, we'd better turn back now. It's already an hour. Maybe tomorrow—"

"Of course, Jeremy. Any time. I love it, really. I'm so glad you asked me!" The smile she gave him was quite insurance enough of a second date. He didn't say so, but she was astute enough to see it in the warmth of his eyes.

"I've got to stop flirting," she told herself seriously then, "or he'll really be falling in love with me. I just want him to imagine he is."

It was Jeremy's suggestion that they dismount and walk the last quarter-mile or so, in order to "stretch their legs" and release the cramped muscles that would otherwise be saddle weary. This walking, Jeremy remembered from western years, was a trick all good horsemen know.

He helped her from the saddle as they came to the Merrifield estate. They were at the west entrance this time. A gate there, long unused, could be unchained, they found. Going through it and up the winding old path had a certain zest as of exploration. They could walk side by side, leading their horses, and evidently such a thing had happened before because when they loitered the gentle animals nudged the boy and girl in the back to urge them on.

Jeremy had not talked much this morning. The sheer strangeness of riding again, and especially of riding out in public with a beautiful girl, had an obvious effect on him. They had chosen to ride down Montrose Manor onto the country club bridle paths. They discovered that they could have gone on and on indefinitely, for the path led to the banks of a creek that wound on out of the residential area into a region of forest and farmlands. Gayle had made a mental note to go farther there next time. The beauty of the countryside, and the subtle exhiliration of riding horses, which is unlike any other sport in the world, made conversation unnecessary, really. Gayle had come not to mind Jeremy's reticence about speech. She sensed that he was happiest when not expected to talk much, and she, too, could be ever so happy just looking and thinking.

He seemed to feel that he had been inadequate as an escort, though, when they started up the shaded path back at home.

"I guess I didn't make it very entertaining, Gayle. I—see here, I can be frank with you—I honestly don't know what to say to girls much, Gayle!"

She looked at him in quick surprise. It was an honest admission, and a decidedly brave one.

She touched his arm, squeezed it in genuine feeling. "That's all right, Jeremy! Quite all right. I never thought of you as needing to talk, Why, Jeremy, most men talk too much. Don't you know that?"

His eyes showed his gratitude.

"I never went around much with girls, Gayle. But you're different. Well, all the girls here now are, I guess. But you are—well, you're even different from them. I mean—well, I guess you know what I mean—you have—they—"

He was bogging down again, she perceived, and she forced herself to control threatened laughter. She turned to look straight ahead and talk as matter-of-factly as she could, holding his elbow and flicking at leaves and pebbles with her riding crop. "I understand, Jeremy. Everybody has to get used to a new place, and new people. You haven't been in our city long and it takes time to make a group of new friends whom you like. I think anybody is ill at ease among strangers for a while. Look"—she had a sudden idea—"you met several new girls you liked at the party last week, didn't you? And some of the boys? Why don't you telephone them? Get up a riding party, several couples. I think it would be gobs of fun!"

"Oh, I say, yes! Oh, no! I mean—"

"Sure, Jeremy! They'd all love it. They admired you a great deal. Honestly, they did. You ought to buy some horses of your own, really, and then you could—"

She stopped abruptly, stopped talking, and stopped walking, as well. Jeremy halted, too.

Before them, not many yards away, Lola Montesa had suddenly turned into their dark path, stumbled into it, because she had her hands to her face and was crying as if her heart would break. She had walked near to them before she saw Jeremy and Gayle beholding her with consternation.

"Lola, darling!" Gayle exclaimed, in awe.

Lola turned quickly and almost ran through the beautiful green laurel and privet that grew in masses along there. For an instant Jeremy and Gayle looked at each other. Jeremy was quite pale. Then Gayle dropped her horse's reins and ran after Lola.

Jeremy dropped the reins and ran, too, for a little way.

When he came out into the open from the shrubbery, he caught a glimpse of the girls entering the green hedges that screened the old swimming pool. He ran over there. Then he saw that Gayle had her arm around Lola and was leading her still farther, because workmen were busy in and around the empty pool. Seeing them flee, Jeremy sensed that he would be an intruder. Gayle could handle the situation, give Lola whatever comfort she would need; he could restrain his curiosity for the moment.

Back, leading both horses, after a minute or so, and wondering whatever could have happened, he came again to an opening along the old pathway and saw Bill Bailey at hand.

"Oh, I say, Bill! I say, Bill!"

Bill turned to face the inevitable.

"Did you, ah, see Lola? Crying? And running?"

"Huh? You say—Oh!"

"You heard me, Tucker. I said I'm to blame for the weeping myself. I popped off at the mouth. I thought I knew what I was talking about. You needn't look so shocked, mister. Hell, Tucker, if you weren't such a panty waist that you can't see what goes on right under—"

Bill stopped short. His lips tightened, and he took a deep breath. Then he went on talking before Jeremy could get in a word.

"I didn't mean that, Jeremy. Overlook it, will you? I didn't mean it at all. I apologize. I'm just—just worked up, is all. You're all right. Matter of fact, I wish you'd back me up against a tree or something and kick me half silly."

"Oh, I say!" Jeremy was greatly distressed, staring at Bill. He held out a hand as if in supplication. "Bill, old man, I—well, I don't understand, but—see here, Bill, can't I help some way? I don't wish to be—to intrude—but see here, Bill, you're the only—"

Jeremy had been touched by the tone in Bill's voice as much as by the actual words. Bill interrupted him now to unburden his heart some more.

"I'm a low down, bungling, dimwitted heel, Tucker, and no foolin'. I guess I've been cocky as hell. Barging in here and making your granddad give me a job. Thinking I could run everybody's business. Trying to—look, Lola's not what we thought she—what I thought she was. I'll bet a red hat on that, now. I can look at a person and tell when they're honest."

The horses were quite forgotten and so turned to crop grass idly. Jeremy gripped the other young man's arms in sudden feeling.

"I say, Bill, I don't know what you mean. But I—see here, I won't have you in trouble, if I can stop it, if I can help any. You're the only friend I've got. I guess you're the only friend I ever had!"

Jeremy spoke so forcefully that Bill was quite taken out of himself. The shy fellow plainly was experiencing emotional disturbance as great as Bill's own. My friend! The only friend I've got. The only friend I ever had!

Bill looked at him closely.

Friend is a magic word, a magic concept.

Bill had half despised the bespectacled Jeremy, had felt half jealous of his popularity with Gayle. But Jeremy had called him friend and meant it!

"Bill," Jeremy suddenly resumed, "I—I've got nearly a million dollars, I guess. In banks. You—I—I—will any of that help? Or all of it?"

TODAY'S GARDENGRAPH

By DEAN HALLIDAY

(Distributed by Central Press Association)

Leaf spot of chrysanthemums is a fungous disease which is more common than most amateur gardeners suspect. The disease is first indicated by the appearance of dark brown spots on the foliage. These spots increase in size until the leaf is completely withered and falls from the plant.

Since chrysanthemums bloom late in the season the disease is apt to strip the plants of nearly all their leaves by the time the flowers appear. As shown in today's Garden-Graph, the diseased plants will appear bare-legged at blooming time unless the disease has been checked beforehand.

Leaf spot can be prevented, or controlled, by spraying the plants with Bordeaux mixture, repeating this treatment every two or three weeks. If the disease is present, the picking and burning of the infested leaves will also help to prevent its spreading. The lower leaves on a plant are the first to be attacked by the disease.

Red spider mites may be driven from hollyhocks and phlox by a spray of cold water on the under sides of the leaves. This should be done toward evening. Rust, blight and mildew on phlox, snapdragons, hollyhocks and delphiniums may be attacked by spraying or dusting them at regular intervals with Bordeaux mixture or colloidal sulphur.

Keep the lawn mowed regularly. As the weather becomes hotter set the knives higher so as to leave a greater length of grass. This will help to prevent burning of the roots and will do away with the necessity of constant watering in order to keep the lawn green.

More interest is being taken each year in Summer flowering bulbs and tubers. Dahlias may be secured and planted out now in the form of small started plants, which is the least expensive way to try the newer sorts.

Much staking will have to be done this month. All tall-growing perennials will require support before the tops become heavy enough to break down under their own weight and the forces of the elements. Staking while growth proceeds gives better results and is less conspicuous than when it is left until the plants are tall and bushy.

Now is a good time to start the seed of many perennials. A sheltered frame is an ideal place, but where this is not available, a well prepared spot in the garden will serve. Sow in rows and thin out when the seedlings come up. A screen of lath or burlap to protect the seedlings from the sun will help them to make more satisfactory growth.

WRITTEN FOR AND RELEASED BY CENTRAL PRESS ASSOCIATION

CHAPTER THIRTY-ONE

GAYLE SMILED to herself. She realized that her position at the moment required a certain dignity, nevertheless she had to be practical, too.

"Jeremy," she began, "I don't believe it would be wise for us to ride more than an hour this first time. Do you?"

She implied that there might be other times, because she really meant that there should be. This horseback ride was the first "date" Jeremy had requested of her. Somehow she knew it was the first time he had ever asked a girl to go on a social event with him, and if he chose riding she had no intention of letting that advantage slip. She could use it, maybe, to make him take the initiative again.

"Why, ah, I hadn't thought, Gayle. It's a lovely morning, and—"

"Oh, isn't it? But the truth is, Jeremy, I am not used to riding. There are muscles and things, and I'd be crippling around. You won't think I'm a killjoy?"

"Oh, I say, Gayle, no! I never thought of that. I used to ride out west. I guess it would make us sore. I never thought—ha, ha! Sure. Sure, we'd better turn back now. It's already an hour. Maybe tomorrow—"

"Of course, Jeremy. Any time. I love it, really. I'm so glad you asked me!" The smile she gave him was quite insurance enough of a second date. He didn't say so, but she was astute enough to see it in the warmth of his eyes.

"I've got to stop flirting," she told herself seriously then, "or he'll really be falling in love with me. I just want him to imagine he is."

It was Jeremy's suggestion that they dismount and walk the last quarter-mile or so, in order to "stretch their legs" and release the cramped muscles that would otherwise be saddle weary. This walking, Jeremy remembered from western years, was a trick all good horsemen know.

He helped her from the saddle as they came to the Merrifield estate. They were at the west entrance this time. A gate there, long unused, could be unchained, they found. Going through it and up the winding old path had a certain zest as of exploration. They could walk side by side, leading their horses, and evidently such a thing had happened before because when they loitered the gentle animals nudged the boy and girl in the back to urge them on.

Jeremy had not talked much this morning. The sheer strangeness of riding again, and especially of riding out in public with a beautiful girl, had an obvious effect on him. They had chosen to ride down Montrose Manor onto the country club bridle paths. They discovered that they could have gone on and on indefinitely, for the path led to the banks of a creek that wound on out of the residential area into a region of forest and farmlands. Gayle had made a mental note to go farther there next time. The beauty of the countryside, and the subtle exhiliration of riding horses, which is unlike any other sport in the world, made conversation unnecessary, really. Gayle had come not to mind Jeremy's reticence about speech. She sensed that he was happiest when not expected to talk much, and she, too, could be ever so happy just looking and thinking.

He seemed to feel that he had been inadequate as an escort, though, when they started up the shaded path back at home.

"I guess I didn't make it very entertaining, Gayle. I—see here, I can be frank with you—I honestly don't know what to say to girls much, Gayle!"

She looked at him in quick surprise. It was an honest admission, and a decidedly brave one.

She touched his arm, squeezed it in genuine feeling. "That's all right, Jeremy! Quite all right. I never thought of you as needing to talk. Why, Jeremy, most men talk too much. Don't you know that?"

His eyes showed his gratitude.

"I never went around much with girls, Gayle. But you're different. Well, all the girls here now are, I guess. But you are—well, you're even different from them. I mean—well, I guess you know what I mean—you have—they—"

He was bogging down again, she perceived, and she forced herself to control threatened laughter. She turned to look straight ahead and talk as matter-of-factly as she could, holding his elbow and flicking at leaves and pebbles with her riding crop. "I understand, Jeremy. Everybody has to get used to a new place, and new people. You haven't been in our city long and it takes time to make a group of new friends whom you like. I think anybody is ill at ease among strangers for a while. Look"—she had a sudden idea—"you met several new girls you liked at the party last week, didn't you? And some of the boys? Why don't you telephone them? Get up a riding party, several couples. I think it would be gobs of fun!"

"Oh, I say, yes! Oh, no! I mean—"

"Sure, Jeremy! They'd all love it. They admired you a great deal. Honestly, they did. You ought to buy some horses of your own, really, and then you could—"

She stopped abruptly, stopped talking, and stopped walking, as well. Jeremy halted, too.

Keyser Negro Enters Plea of Not Guilty to Assault Indictment

KEYSER, W. Va., June 7.—Paul Tross, 41, Keyser negro, entered a plea of not guilty before Judge Robert McV. Drane at a special session of circuit court here today to an indictment charging criminal assault upon Miss Mary Lynn Stebbins.

The plea was entered after Attorneys Lester Reynolds and Harry Taylor had been appointed by the court to defend the negro. Tross told Judge Drane he had not been able to obtain counsel.

Judge Drane said that "directly and indirectly" it had come to his ears that the attorney or attorneys who defended Tross would be liable to "much criticism."

"I am making this statement," he said, "so that the public will know that these attorneys have not taken this case of their own choosing. Every man charged with any offense is entitled to counsel, and it is the duty of the court to appoint him. If there is any criticism, the court is willing to assume the responsibility, and he is the one to get the criticism."

Yesterday a special grand jury returned an indictment against Tross. He was alleged to have assaulted Miss Stebbins, a Piedmont school teacher, in her Main street apartment here early last Sunday morning.

The case of the state vs Tross will be tried either Monday or Tuesday. Attorney Taylor said that it may be necessary to be out of town on Monday, the day originally set for the trial. He said late this afternoon he would not know definitely until Monday.

Last Monday at a preliminary hearing before Justice of the Peace C. C. Compton, the negro entered a plea of guilty.

Two of the six others indicted by the grand jury summoned primarily to examine evidence of Tross's case entered pleas of guilty this morning before Judge Drane. Olen Arbogast, 19, Keyser, pleaded guilty to breaking and entering the Armstrong street store of A. C. Rinhart last month. Charles M. Tranum, Chicago, pleaded guilty to transporting a stolen radio across the West Virginia-Maryland line.

Injuries Are Fatal To Andrew Murray

Andrew Leon Murray, 19, today was the second victim of an automobile crash near Burlington last Monday night to be claimed by death. Murray, who suffered multiple injuries, and never regained consciousness, died at 3:20 a. m. today at Potomac Valley hospital here.

Doyle W. Marshall, 23, driver of the car in which Murray, Hartsell McCue, 18, and Elwood Rice, 19, all of Keyser, were in the car when they crashed into a loaded coal truck near the Van Myra camp grounds, just this side of Burlington about 11 o'clock Monday night, was instantly killed.

Rice suffered a fractured skull and jaw and a dislocated hip. He regained consciousness this morning, hospital attendants reported. McCue, whose injuries were less serious, was said today to be "much improved." He was sitting up this morning, and attaches said he would be released "in a day or two."

Murray was the son of Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Murray, 28 Sharpless street. Besides his parents he is survived by a brother, William Edward Murray, and a sister, Margaret Murray, both at home.

Electrical Storm

A bolt of lightning struck a hammer being used by Tom McCullough, Keyser carpenter, and knocked it from his hands during a severe electrical storm here yesterday afternoon about 5 o'clock, but McCullough was uninjured.

A dozen places are known to have been struck by lightning while what was described as "one of the worst electrical storms ever to visit this section" raged over the city, accompanied by a heavy downpour of rain. No serious damage was done.

At the height of the storm members of the Keyser fire company were called to the home of Herman Boehmes, B street, where lightning struck an electric clock on the kitchen stove. The bolt traveled from the clock to the stove and was grounded. Just a few minutes later another alarm sounded, calling firemen to the home of Mrs. Gertrude Robinson, corner of C and St. Cloud streets, a block away from the Boehmes home. Here lightning had struck wiring in the house, and was again quickly grounded when it traveled to a fixture connected to a gas pipe.

For a few minutes power here was cut off, and the city plunged into near-darkness, but the current was shortly restored.

Today at least twenty-two street lights were reported out.

The storm, which centered directly over Keyser, lasted about a half hour.

The rows stretch out in neat, straight lines, each marked by stakes which he puts in the ground when he plants the seed. Tross To Go on Trial Monday Or Tuesday

Keyser Negro Enters Plea of Not Guilty to Assault Indictment

KEYSER, W. Va., June 7.—Paul Tross, 41, Keyser negro, entered a plea of not guilty before Judge Robert McV. Drane at a special session of circuit court here today to an indictment charging criminal assault upon Miss Mary Lynn Stebbins.

The plea was entered after Attorneys Lester Reynolds and Harry Taylor had been appointed by the court to defend the negro. Tross told Judge Drane he had not been able to obtain counsel.

Judge Drane said that "directly and indirectly" it had come to his ears that the attorney or attorneys who defended Tross would be liable to "much criticism."

"I am making this statement," he said, "so that the public will know that these attorneys have not taken this case of their own choosing. Every man charged with any offense is entitled to counsel, and it is the duty of the court to appoint him. If there is any criticism, the court is willing to assume the responsibility, and he is the one to get the criticism."

Yesterday a special grand jury returned an indictment against Tross. He was alleged to have assaulted Miss Stebbins, a Piedmont school teacher, in her Main street apartment here early last Sunday morning.

The case of the state vs Tross will be tried either Monday or Tuesday. Attorney Taylor said that it may be necessary to be out of town on Monday, the day originally set for the trial. He said late this afternoon he would not know definitely until Monday.

Last Monday at a preliminary hearing before Justice of the Peace C. C. Compton, the negro entered a plea of guilty.

Two of the six others indicted by the grand jury summoned primarily to examine evidence of Tross's case entered pleas of guilty this morning before Judge Drane. Olen Arbogast, 19, Keyser, pleaded guilty to breaking and entering the Armstrong street store of A. C. Rinhart last month. Charles M. Tranum, Chicago, pleaded guilty to transporting a stolen radio across the West Virginia-Maryland line.

Injuries Are Fatal To Andrew Murray

Andrew Leon Murray, 19, today was the second victim of an automobile crash near Burlington last Monday night to be claimed by death. Murray, who suffered multiple injuries, and never regained consciousness, died at 3:20 a. m. today at Potomac Valley hospital here.

Doyle W. Marshall, 23, driver of the car in which Murray, Hartsell McCue, 18, and Elwood Rice, 19, all of Keyser, were in the car when they crashed into a loaded coal truck near the Van Myra camp grounds, just this side of Burlington about 11 o'clock Monday night, was instantly killed.

Rice suffered a fractured skull and jaw and a dislocated hip. He regained consciousness this morning, hospital attendants reported. McCue, whose injuries were less serious, was said today to be "much improved." He was sitting up this morning, and attaches said he would be released "in a day or two."

Murray was the son of Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Murray, 28 Sharpless street. Besides his parents he is survived by a brother, William Edward Murray, and a sister, Margaret Murray, both at home.

Electrical Storm

A bolt of lightning struck a hammer being used by Tom McCullough, Keyser carpenter, and knocked it from his hands during a severe electrical storm here yesterday afternoon about 5 o'clock, but McCullough was uninjured.

A dozen places are known to have been struck by lightning while what was described as "one of the worst electrical storms ever to visit this section" raged over the city, accompanied by a heavy downpour of rain. No serious damage was done.

At the height of the storm members of the Keyser fire company were called to the home of Herman Boehmes, B street, where lightning struck an electric clock on the kitchen stove. The bolt traveled from the clock to the stove and was grounded. Just a few minutes later another alarm sounded, calling firemen to the home of Mrs. Gertrude Robinson, corner of C and St. Cloud streets, a block away from the Boehmes home. Here lightning had struck wiring in the house, and was again quickly grounded when it traveled to a fixture connected to a gas pipe.

For a few minutes power here was cut off, and the city plunged into near-darkness, but the current was shortly restored.

Today at least twenty-two street lights were reported out.

Stocks Advance as Traders See Better Chance for Allies To Win

But Market Is Dull and Many Await Result of Great Battle

By FREDERICK GARDNER

NEW YORK, June 7. (AP)—Wall Street expressed increased hope for the Allied defense today by pushing prices of stock leaders ahead one to two points.

Transactions totaled 469,410 shares, compared with 427,315 yesterday.

Brokers said there was a general feeling that the price level would remain close to its present position until the battle in northern France was decided definitely.

Assisting the movement for the rise were reports that Washington favored a program which would provide about 1,000 American fighting planes for the Allies in the near future, estimates of rapidly increasing steel production, and a report from Detroit of improved automobile output.

In immediate response came substantial gain for steel, motor, aircraft and chemical shares. Other issues followed.

Leaders on the upside were U. S. Steel, Bethlehem, Youngstown, General Motors, Chrysler, Douglas, Lockheed, United Air Lines, American Airlines, Monsanto Chemical, Allied Chemical, Westinghouse, Phillip Morris, International Nickel, American Telephone, Loews, National Biscuit, Celanese and Texas Corp.

In the curb, where 86,000 shares were tradedd compared with 66,000 yesterday, chief gainers included Heyden Chemical, Brewster Aero, Bell Aircraft, Jones & Laughlin Steel and Mead Johnson.

Musically, the picture is one of Crosby's best. Gloria, who made her screen debut in "The Under-Pup" is a child soprano. She is 12 years old.

Eight songs are to be heard in "If I Had My Way."

Old timers, patrons of vaudeville when the variety entertainment was in its heydey, will be delighted with the screen appearance of Eddie Leonard, Blanche Ring, Trixie Friganza, Grace LaRue and Julian Eltinge, who are to be seen in one of the sequences of the picture.

In addition to Bing, Gloria and the vaudevillians, the cast includes Charles Winninger, El Brendel, Donald Woods, Claire Dodd, Nana Bryant, Allyn Joslyn, Moroni Olsen, Barnett Parker and Kathryn Adams. The picture was produced from an original story by Butler, William Conselman and James V. Kern.

Two Bridges Built For War Picture

Because Robert E. Sherwood's stage play, "Waterloo Bridge," was made more dramatically timely in its picturization by opening on wartime London of today, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer had to build two Waterloo Bridges for the film, starring Vivien Leigh and Robert Taylor, now showing at the Maryland theater. The original bridge, built well over a hundred years ago in commemoration of the British victory of Waterloo, started to crumble in the center some ten years ago, due, it was thought, to undermining from Zeppelin bombings during the first World war. Public opinion was so strong that the bridge was never torn down. However, within a few years it was necessary to erect a temporary steel structure, paralleling the old bridge, to take care of heavy London traffic

With the first scene of this war drama opening in the present time, the action takes place on the temporary steel structure, with the old bridge in the background. Subsequent scenes transpire on the historic Waterloo bridge of the World war year of 1917. To picture authentically the two bridges, which play important roles in the film, 600 feet of the two 1500-foot spans were minutely recreated for the picture on studio sound stages.

Revue and Pictures Are Offered at Strand

The love of two strong-willed, ruthless men, for a beautiful girl, with an African jungle forming the background, is the theme of the Paramount picture "Safari," which opens tomorrow at the Strand. Douglas Fairbanks Jr., and Madeleine Carroll are co-starred with Tullio Carminati, Muriel Angelus, Lynne Overman and Billy Gilbert playing featured roles.

Using Fairbanks, a famous hunter, to inspire the jealousy of Carminati, a baron, and precipitate him into a proposal Madeleine and Fairbanks spend a night alone in the jungle, the baron, who has hired the hunter to lead the safari, orders his to dispatch a wounded lion, practically a sentence of death. Emerging with a torn arm, Fairbanks breaks camp, denounces both Madeleine, who now really loves him, and the baron, and prepares to fly to Europe. The denouncement provides one of the most dramatic situations in the picture.

An array of short subjects including late News Flashes, showing the attack of the Germans on Paris completes the program.

Suicide Fleets Are Theme of Picture

Edward Dmytryk, whose picture, "Emergency Squad," is now at the Garden theater, took up the Oriental language four years ago while working on a picture set against a Shanghai background and now can read and write it with the ease of a Mandarin. Astronomy is a more recent hobby with him, but he showed how serious he is about it a short time ago by acquiring an eight-and-a-half inch reflecting telescope.

Dmytryk's hobbies when he's at work consist of thrill dramas, and "Emergency Squad" runs true to form. It's built around the adventures of the so-called "suicide fleets" of the large American cities. The chief players are Louise Campbell, William Henry, Richard Denning and Robert Paige.

"Colorado Sunset," a western starring Gene Autry, is the co-feature at the Garden.

Two More Features Are Billed at Embassy

Two more feature pictures are billed for tomorrow at the Embassy theater.

One is Columbia's comedy, "His Girl Friday", starring Cary Grant, Rosalind Russell and Ralph Bellamy.

The second is the action drama, "Bad Boy", starring Johnny Downs and Rosalind Keith.

Closing today at the Embassy will be a double feature bill with Ken Maynard in a western, "Phantom Rancher," and Edmund Lowe and Constance Cummings in "Seven Sinners."

In addition to the two features there will be another chapter of the serial, "The Shadow".

Opinions Are Given on Use Of Tobacco

Writer Says He Fails To See any "Moral Issue" in Smoking

By LOGAN CLENDENING, M. D.

There is no question that tobacco is a drug. And there is no question that as a habit its use is very common.

Those being undeniable facts, they arouse in different persons, different reactions. Once when I wrote of some experiments made on the effect of tobacco on athletes' "wind," I received a letter from a mid-west college instructor saying he would no longer allow my writings to be read in his classrooms, as they heretofore had been, and that he was convinced from a study of his students, that the use of cigarettes caused low grades of scholarship.

I feel that, intellectually, such a man shows that he does not know the nature of evidence. But he reveals one attitude of mind towards tobacco—the relentless reformer.

It's pretty hard to figure out, as G. K. Chesteron, the great English essayist, said, where there is any "moral issue" involved in smoking or not smoking at all. There is, in the use of alcohol and, of course, the narcotics. But not tobacco. And I think we ought to get that straightened out to begin with.

Then there is a large group of people who smoke and who are continuously worrying about whether it really does them any harm or not

Started as Healer

And there is a group which smokes and is convinced it does harm (without any very good evidence). But these enjoy it enough so they go on smoking anyway.

Then there is the vast majority who smoke and don't think very much about it one way or the other.

Curiously, in view of its present bad repute, it was at first used for its great healing powers. Jean Nicot, whose name has been eponymized in "nicotine," sent seeds of the tobacco to Catherine de Medici that they might be cultivated for their medicinal properties. "Herba panacea" it was called and William Lilly refers to "our holy herb nicotain."

The opponents of tobacco have always used as their impregnable rock of debate, the fact that nicotine is a poison. There is no question about it. There is enough nicotine in an ordinary cigar to kill two stout adult men. Probably more, since from sixty to 120 milligrams will kill a man, depending on age and condition. Every fraternity house and, I presume, every sorority house in the United States, knows that a very small amount of the goo in the stem of a pipe, placed on its tongue will kill a cat in four minutes. Eight drops given to a horse will kill it in eight minutes.

Questions and Answers

L. S.:—"Kindly give me a complete diet for spastic colitis. Is there a different one for mucous colitis?"

Answer—Spastic colitis requires a bland diet in which rough vegetable fiber is eliminated. For this reason the use of bran, fruits or vegetables with a good deal of fiber, such as corn, celery, carrots, radishes, etc., should be eliminated from the diet. Fruit juices are sufficient to give the vitamin content of fruits—orange juice, grapefruit juice, etc. Lean tender meats, eggs, bread, potatoes, desserts are all allowed. Salads are usually too fibrous. Mucoups colitis is a complicated condition that cannot be treated by diet alone.

FEATURED IN ROMANCE

Cary Grant comes to the Embassy theater tomorrow in Columbia's gay new romance, the Howard Hawks production, "His Girl Friday." Rosalind Russell, spitfire of "The Women," is co-starred with Grant, who is seen as her likable ex-husband determined to prevent her marriage to Ralph Bellamy.

Lake George, Alaska, is 100 feet deep and covers more than 100 square miles, yet it disappears every year. It is dammed by a glacier which melts every spring, permitting the lake to drain away.

Stocks Advance as Traders See Better Chance for Allies To Win

By FREDERICK GARDNER

NEW YORK, June 7. (AP)—Wall street expressed increased hope for the Allied defense today by pushing prices of stock leaders ahead one to two points.

Transactions totaled 469,410 shares, compared with 427,315 yesterday.

Brokers said there was a general feeling that the price level would remain close to its present position until the battle in northern France was decided definitely.

Assisting the movement for the rise were reports that Washington favored a program which would provide about 1,000 American fighting planes for the Allies in the near future, estimates of rapidly increasing steel production, and a report from Detroit of improved automobile output.

In immediate response came substantial gain for steel, motor, aircraft and chemical shares. Other issues followed.

Leaders on the upside were U. S. Steel, Bethlehem, Youngstown, General Motors, Chrysler, Douglas, Lockheed, United Air Lines, American Airlines, Monsanto Chemical, Allied Chemical, Westinghouse, Philip Morris, International Nickel, American Telephone, Loews, National Biscuit, Celanese and Texas Corp.

In the curb, where 86,000 shares were tradedd compared with 66,000 yesterday, chief gainers included Heyden Chemical, Brewster Aero, Bell Aircraft, Jones & Laughlin Steel and Mead Johnson.

IN MARYLAND FILM

Vivien Leigh and Robert Taylor in "Waterloo Bridge," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picture now showing at the Maryland theater.

Theaters Today

Jean and Crosby Are Teamed at Liberty

Bing Crosby and Gloria Jean are to be seen at the New Liberty theater where Universal's "If I Had My Way" is heading the bill.

Musically, the picture is one of Crosby's best. Gloria, who made her screen debut in "The Under-Pup" is a child soprano. She is 12 years old.

Eight songs are to be heard in "If I Had My Way."

Old timers, patrons of vaudeville when the variety entertainment was in its heydey, will be delighted with the screen appearance of Eddie Leonard, Blanche Ring, Trixie Friganza, Grace LaRue and Julian Eltinge, who are to be seen in one of the sequences of the picture.

In addition to Bing, Gloria and the vaudevillians, the cast includes Charles Winninger, El Brendel, Donald Woods, Claire Dodd, Nana Bryant, Allyn Joslyn, Moroni Olsen, Barnett Parker and Kathryn Adams. The picture was produced from an original story by Butler, William Conselman and James V. Kern.

Two Bridges Built For War Picture

Because Robert E. Sherwood's stage play, "Waterloo Bridge," was made more dramatically timely in its picturization by opening on wartime London of today, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer had to build two Waterloo Bridges for the film, starring Vivien Leigh and Robert Taylor, now showing at the Maryland theater. The original bridge, built well over a hundred years ago in commemoration of the British victory of Waterloo, started to crumble in the center some ten years ago, due, it was thought, to undermining from Zeppelin bombings during the first World war. Public opinion was so strong that the bridge was never torn down. However, within a few years it was necessary to erect a temporary steel structure, paralleling the old bridge, to take care of heavy London traffic

With the first scene of this war drama opening in the present time, the action takes place on the temporary steel structure, with the old bridge in the background. Subsequent scenes transpire on the historic Waterloo bridge of the World war year of 1917. To picture authentically the two bridges, which play important roles in the film, 600 feet of the two 1500-foot spans were minutely recreated for the picture on studio sound stages.

Revue and Pictures Are Offered at Strand

The love of two strong-willed, ruthless men, for a beautiful girl, with an African jungle forming the background, is the theme of the Paramount picture "Safari," which opens tomorrow at the Strand. Douglas Fairbanks Jr., and Madeleine Carroll are co-starred with Tullio Carminati, Muriel Angelus, Lynne Overman and Billy Gilbert playing featured roles.

Using Fairbanks, a famous hunter, to inspire the jealousy of Carminati, a baron, and precipitate him into a proposal Madeleine and Fairbanks spend a night alone in the jungle, the baron, who has hired the hunter to lead the safari, orders his to dispatch a wounded lion, practically a sentence of death. Emerging with a torn arm, Fairbanks breaks camp, denounces both Madeleine, who now really loves him, and the baron, and prepares to fly to Europe. The denouncement provides one of the most dramatic situations in the picture.

An array of short subjects including late News Flashes, showing the attack of the Germans on Paris completes the program.

Suicide Fleets Are Theme of Picture

Edward Dmytryk, whose picture, "Emergency Squad," is now at the Garden theater, took up the Oriental language four years ago while working on a picture set against a Shanghai background and now can read and write it with the ease of a Mandarin. Astronomy is a more recent hobby with him, but he showed how serious he is about it a short time ago by acquiring an eight-and-a-half inch reflecting telescope.

Dmytryk's hobbies when he's at work consist of thrill dramas, and "Emergency Squad" runs true to form. It's built around the adventures of the so-called "suicide fleets" of the large American cities. The chief players are Louise Campbell, William Henry, Richard Denning and Robert Paige.

"Colorado Sunset," a western starring Gene Autry, is the co-feature at the Garden.

Two More Features Are Billed at Embassy

Two more feature pictures are billed for tomorrow at the Embassy theater.

One is Columbia's comedy, "His Girl Friday", starring Cary Grant, Rosalind Russell and Ralph Bellamy.

The second is the action drama, "Bad Boy", starring Johnny Downs and Rosalind Keith.

Closing today at the Embassy will be a double feature bill with Ken Maynard in a western, "Phantom Rancher," and Edmund Lowe and Constance Cummings in "Seven Sinners."

In addition to the two features there will be another chapter of the serial, "The Shadow".

Opinions Are Given on Use Of Tobacco

Writer Says He Fails To See any "Moral Issue" in Smoking

By LOGAN CLENDENING, M. D.

There is no question that tobacco is a drug And there is no question that as a habit its use is very common.

Those being undeniable facts, they arouse in different persons, different reactions. Once when I wrote of some experiments made on the effect of tobacco on athletes' "wind," I received a letter from a mid-west college instructor saying he would no longer allow my writings to be read in his classrooms, as they heretofore had been, and that he was convinced from a study of his students, that the use of cigarettes caused low grades of scholarship.

I feel that, intellectually, such a man shows that he does not know the nature of evidence. But he reveals one attitude of mind towards tobacco—the relentless reformer.

It's pretty hard to figure out, as G. K. Chesteron, the great English essayist, said, where there is any "moral issue" involved in smoking or not smoking at all. There is, in the use of alcohol and, of course, the narcotics. But not tobacco. And I think we ought to get that straightened out to begin with.

Then there is a large group of people who smoke and who are continuously worrying about whether it really does them any harm or not

Started as Healer

And there is a group which smokes and is convinced it does harm (without any very good evidence). But these enjoy it enough so they go on smoking anyway.

Then there is the vast majority who smoke and don't think very much about it one way or the other.

Curiously, in view of its present bad repute, it was at first used for its great healing powers. Jean Nicot, whose name has been eponymized in "nicotine," sent seeds of the tobacco to Catherine de Medici that they might be cultivated for their medicinal properties. "Herba panacea" it was called and William Lilly refers to "our holy herb nicotain."

The opponents of tobacco have always used as their impregnable rock of debate, the fact that nicotine is a poison. There is no question about it. There is enough nicotine in an ordinary cigar to kill two stout adult men. Probably more, since from sixty to 120 milligrams will kill a man, depending on age and condition. Every fraternity house and, I presume, every sorority house in the United States, knows that a very small amount of the goo in the stem of a pipe, placed on its tongue will kill a cat in four minutes. Eight drops given to a horse will kill it in eight minutes.

Questions and Answers

L. S.:—"Kindly give me a complete diet for spastic colitis. Is there a different one for mucous colitis?"

Answer—Spastic colitis requires a bland diet in which rough vegetable fiber is eliminated. For this reason the use of bran, fruits or vegetables with a good deal of fiber, such as corn, celery, carrots, radishes, etc., should be eliminated from the diet. Fruit juices are sufficient to give the vitamin content of fruits—orange juice, grapefruit juice, etc. Lean tender meats, eggs, bread, potatoes, desserts are all allowed. Salads are usually too fibrous. Mucous colitis is a complicated condition that cannot be treated by diet alone.

Lake George, Alaska, is 100 feet deep and covers more than 100 square miles, yet it disappears every year. It is dammed by a glacier which melts every spring, permitting the lake to drain away.

FEATURED IN ROMANCE

Three-Way Tie for Lead in National Open

Snead Runs Into Storm--Little and Smith Catch Him

Takes 74 after Brilliant First Round of Dazzling 67

Frank Walsh Behind Leaders with 142--Hogan and Parks Have 143s

By GAYLE TALBOT

CLEVELAND, June 7 (AP)—Wind, rain and tournament jitters proved a little too much for Sam Snead today and he fell back into a three-way tie with Lawson Little and Horton Smith with 141 at the halfway stage of the National open golf championship.

Sam, whose 67 in yesterday's opening round broke all open records, was the big show today and he did his best. A tremendous crowd followed his every stroke and nearly made it impossible for him to play several holes. A sudden, violent windstorm struck him on the fourth hole, and at the short 17th he took a disastrous five to finish a 74, two strokes over par.

Thus the grand championship of golf tightened up like a kettle drum. Little, playing around early before the storm blew up, shot himself a brilliant 69 to catch Snead. Horton, Smith, playing late after the elements had subsided, produced a 72—even par—to make it a trio at 141.

Walsh Produces 69

Frank Walsh stroked the only other 69 of the day to land all by himself in the second notch at 142. Ben Hogan and Sam Parks, Jr., were dead-locked at 143. Ralph Guldahl, Vic Ghezzi, Dutch Harrison and Leonard Dodson were a quartet at 144.

Among this select group, if matters run true to form, will be found the winner when the final, back-breaking 36 holes have been played tomorrow. Sixty-six players who shot 153 or better for the first two rounds qualified for the finish, but it is extremely doubtful that any of those over 144 tonight will catch the leaders.

Little's name was on many lips tonight. The big fellow, who won two American and British amateur championships a few years ago, said he had "that old feeling" again.

Smith Blows Chance

Smith, one of the last of the stars to come in, had an excellent chance to take the leadership alone. He needed only par scores on the last three holes to finish ahead of Snead and Little by a stroke, but he tightened and took a 4 on the short 17th, the same hole that blasted Snead's hope of finishing ahead for the second straight day.

Demaret, pride of the Winter circuit, and Heafner, the long-hitter from Linville, N. C., each tore up their cards and withdrew in disgust.

The storm, though of only about 40 minutes duration, undoubtedly upset Snead. It struck him while he was playing the fourth hole and he began spraying his drives all over the landscape.

He had 39 strokes for the first nine and undoubtedly would have done worse if his wild approach to the ninth had not struck a spectator in the back and dropped dead. Some estimated that Sam would have taken about an eight on the hole if his ball had been permitted to roll on under the automobiles around the club house.

Washington Downs Chicago

WASHINGTON, June 7. (AP)—Dutch Leonard, Washington's knuckle-ball specialist, held the Chicago White Sox to nine hits today as the Nationals registered a 3-2 triumph.

Cecil Travis' triple in the seventh inning led to the run which sent Washington ahead, 2-1 ,when Jimmy Bloodworth singled to score him.

Washington boosted its lead off Jack Knott to 3-1 in the eighth when George Case walked, moved to second on Buddy Lewis' sacrifice, to third on Johnny Welaj's infield out and scored on Gerald Walker's looping double to right.

Leonard survived a ninth inning rally by the Sox which produced one run.

Dodgers Whip Reds 4 to 2 in Eleven Innings

Take National League Lead and Hand Walters First Defeat

CINCINNATI, June 7 (AP) — The indescribable Brooklyn Dodgers got their vengeance on the Cincinnati Reds today with a 4 to 2 eleven inning victory that lifted Brooklyn into the National lead and snapped Bucky Walters unbroken string of pitching triumphs at nine.

It was here at Crosley Field on May 1 that the Reds stopped Brooklyn after the Dodgers had won their first nine games of the season. They batted Hugh Casey out of the box that day and made the Dodgers forget for the moment Tex Carleton's no-hitter of the day before.

Today the Dodgers built their new winning streak to six straight games and Hugh Casey received credit for the victory after relieving Tot Pressnell. They permitted Cincinnati only six hits while Walters was belted for nine, including Dolph Camilli's two-run homer that won the game in the eleventh.

It was a memorable contest for the 8,601 customers. Pressnell and Walters matched three scoreless innings at the start before Brooklyn scored two runs in the fourth on a homer by Joe Vosmik, a double by Camilli and a single by Manager Leo Durocher.

Harry Craft homered for Cincinnati in the fifth and the Reds tied the score in the sixth on a triple by Lonnie Frey and an infield out. That was when Casey came on duty and allowed two hits in finishing. One of them was a triple by Craft at the start of the ninth, but the Reds weren't able to get him home and in the tenth they loaded the bases again without scoring.

Walters meanwhile allowed only one hit from the fifth until the eleventh. Then Vosmik singled, Ernie Koy was sent in to run for him, and Camilli hit his sixth home run.

Cards Defeat New York 3-2

ST. LOUIS, June 7 (AP) — In their first game following the release of Manager Ray Blades the St. Louis Cardinals edged out the New York Giants 3 to 2 today for unlucky Hal Schumacher's sixth defeat.

Although the St. Louis sluggers were held to six hits, they put together four of them with a walk for all their runs in the first inning.

After that the Cardinals proceeded to make five double plays, one short of the Major League record, to keep the Giants in check although the New Yorkers got 10 hits off Lon Warneke and Curt Davis. Three of these hits and two walks accounted for the Giants' runs in the seventh. They had made only a total of six for Schumacher in the six games he has lost.

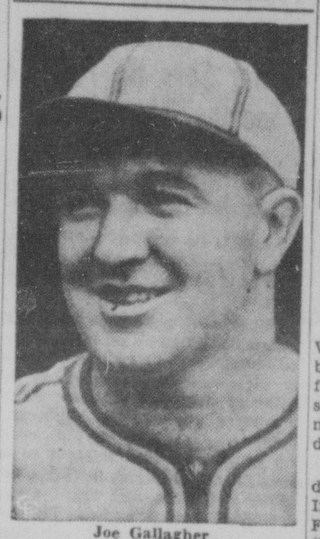
GOES TO DODGERS



Joe Gallagher

This ball player is wearing new livery these days. He is Joe Gallagher, late of the St. Louis Browns and now of the Brooklyn Dodgers. Gallagher was traded to the Dodgers for Roy Cullenbine, for whom Brooklyn paid a $25,000 bonus when he was declared a free agent by Commissioner Landis in the Detroit housecleaning.

Godoy Burlesque Doubted In Next Tilt with Louis

By JOHN LARDNER

Released by North American Newspaper Alliance

NEW YORK, June 7.—Joe Louis has some unfinished business to rub off his books. The only man who ever played squat tag with him is still alive to tell the tale.

What's more, the fellow tells the tale at every opportunity.

"Then I kiss him," relates Senor Arturo Godoy, "and then I squat down and invite him to hit me. But he can't do nothing."

How would you like to be haunted by a guy like that? To make matters worse, Godoy is a tango dancer and a powder-puff puncher. When Louis meets him again two weeks from now, Joseph's friends expect Joe to knock the witness's memory right out from among his brains in the shortest possible time. Why leave a fellow to go around at large telling jokes on you?

Godoy, you remember, went fifteen rounds with Louis last Winter and laughed at the great man with impunity. He took a few stiff blows to the head, but to do him justice, Godoy can soak up punishment, and he soaked up the best of Joe's grade C stuff and practically stood on his head to show how good he felt.

Mocking Won't Win Titles

He mocked the champion from start to finish. Now, you can't win the title by mocking the champion. The rules require something a little more constructive, such as a good punch on the whiskers. Godoy lost the fight decisively, running away nine-tenths of the evening and landing one clean blow to Louis's three. His object was to go the distance, which he did, thanks to the artful coaching of Armand Weill, the weskit.

But Godoy also put question squarely up to Louis: Can a great champion afford to let a rival make fun of him? And can he be a great fighter if the other guy gets away with it?

Joe was lame and lethargic in defense of his prestige against Godoy. Of course, he didn't know ahead of time what was coming, and Joe is a little slow on the uptake. The fight was over before he could adapt himself to circumstances. Being in a lazy mood, and realizing that the waltz was his on points, he just let it go at that.

All right, then, you'll excuse him once. But he can't afford another burlesque. If the champion and old John Blackburn, his trainer, cannot cook up some antidote between them, as well as a way to mash the kidder from Chile like a potato on the night of June 20, then Louis will be made to look very bad indeed.

I doubt whether Godoy will try the same stunts again. After all, he must have some sort of hankering for the title, and he won't win the title by stunting. But, broadly speaking, he will probably fight the same kind of fight—lunge in quickly under Louis's long guns, clinch, wrestle, and shoot inside punches for Joe's head and body. Those punches will never hurt Joe badly, the Godoy armament being what it is, but there is always a chance that they'll bewilder him, and anything can happen to a bewildered fighter.

That's the Godoy policy, outlined by Weskit Weill: go inside and mix it and you've got a chance. Stand off and trade, and you're done for.

Task Is Simplified

That being the case, however, it strikes me that the task of Louis and Blackburn, preparing for the fight, is simplified. They know what to plan for. There is only a limited number of schemes you can try against a hitter of Louis's speed and power, and I think Godoy and Weill have permanently tipped their hand.

The team of Bob Pastor and James J. Johnston slipped one over on Louis once, just as Godoy and Weill did. Pastor made a straight backward fight, running like a deer in reverse. Like Godoy's first fight, it was a sacrifice fight — hardly a chance of winning.

Well, Pastor got his second lick at Louis, and this time tried a slight cross-up. He stood his ground in the first round. Louis promptly bounced him to the canvas a couple of times, and Pastor, as soon as his head cleared, reverted to the old running tactics. This time he didn't run far enough.

Joe has a good record for return matches with good fighters—Schmeling and Pastor. You can call Godoy a good fighter, too, at least a man who knows his business. If Joseph keeps the record clean, he will part Godoy in the middle and close his book with another account balanced.

It saddens me to report that these auspices, so formidable, so clear, so impressive, do not affect Senor Godoy in the least. When last seen, he was thumbing his nose at a likeness of Louis, and a very good likeness, at that. Do you suppose he knows something we don't know?

Yankees Take Indians Over By 5-4 Score

Feller Is Beaten in Ninth When Champions Score Two Runs

NEW YORK, June 7. (AP)—The World Champion Yankees first embarrassed and then defeated the fiery fastballer, Bob Feller, today scoring two runs in the ninth inning to overtake the Cleveland Indians 5 to 4.

The Yankees startled a big week day crowd of 31,430, as well as the Indians, by stealing home against Feller in the second inning, and finally overwhelmed him with four singles in the fatal ninth.

The struggle was an exciting if erratic hurling duel matching Feller against Marvin Breuer and Bump Hadley of the Yanks, with the latter pair holding the Indians to six hits.

Cleveland's first hit was Hall Trosky's fourteenth home run in the second inning and three of the visitors' other blows were crowded into the third inning for three runs.

Meantime, Feller had his fast ball working well and received spectacular support. After giving up three runs in the first two frames, he steadied to hold the champs to two hits and one run until the ninth.

Feller's fault today, however, was wobbliness with men on base. In the second inning he was caught flat-footed as George Selkirk, who had doubled and reached third on a fly, raced home while Feller went through his complicated windup.

In the ninth Gordon singled and stole second, from there he scored the tying run on Babe Dahlgren's single. Then Frank Crosetti rapped a hit back of third and Red Rolfe, lifted a single to short center for the winning run.

Corriganville Wins Over Clary Club 8 to 4

The Corriganville softball team defeated Clary Club at Corriganville yesterday 8 to 4 in a game that was refreshing in that no arguments marred hostilities. Corriganville had 11 hits to 5 by the Claryclubbers. Joe Nestor pumped one out of the lot for the winners.

Three-Year-Olds Will Race Today

NEW YORK, June 7 (AP) — The battle for the three-year old turf championship comes down to Belmont Park's mile and half course tomorrow with E. R. Bradley's Bimelech and Mrs. Ethel V. Mars' Gallahadion heading a field of seven in the seventy-second running of the $25,000 added Belmont Stakes.

If the weather remains as fair and the track as fast as today, Bimelech figures to parade postward the choice of an expected crowd of between 30,000 and 35,000. The Bradley colt has not lived up to pre-season expectations but he has shown he can run over a pasteboard track.

After finishing second back of Gallahadion in the Kentucky Derby, he came back to whip Mrs. Mars' horse in the Preakness and then trailed far back in the Withers Mile at Belmont, which was won by Mrs. Payne Whitney's Corydon, a rank outsider.

Corydon has been entered in tomorrow's race but this time he'll not be neglected in the wagering. The Greentree colt showed by coming from behind in the stretch that the mile and half of the Belmont should be to his liking. He'll have the improved century note as a running mate.

Completing the well-balanced field are, George D. Widener's Your Chance, a speed demon that has showed plenty of improving since trailing in the Preakness; the Millsdale stable's Andy K., a decided factor if he forgets to run out and Mrs. N. C. Phipps' Snow Ridge, kept on the sidelines since early season by the coughing epidemic that invaded trainer "Sunny Jim" Fitzsimmons' barns.

If all seven start, the race will have an estimated value of $47,680, not as rich as either the Derby or Preakness but a race that should help clear up the muddle three-year old division. Post time is about 3:45 p. m., Eastern standard time.

Three-Way Tie for Lead in National Open

Snead Runs Into Storm--Little and Smith Catch Him

Takes 74 after Brilliant First Round of Dazzling 67

By GAYLE TALBOT

CLEVELAND, June 7 (AP)—Wind, rain and tournament jitters proved a little too much for Sam Snead today and he fell back into a three-way tie with Lawson Little and Horton Smith with 141 at the halfway stage of the National open golf championship.

Sam, whose 67 in yesterday's opening round broke all open records, was the big show today and he did his best. A tremendous crowd followed his every stroke and nearly made it impossible for him to play several holes. A sudden, violent windstorm struck him on the fourth hole, and at the short 17th he took a disastrous five to finish a 74, two strokes over par.

Thus the grand championship of golf tightened up like a kettle drum. Little, playing around early before the storm blew up, shot himself a brilliant 69 to catch Snead. Horton, Smith, playing late after the elements had subsided, produced a 72—even par—to make it a trio at 141.

Walsh Produces 69

Frank Walsh stroked the only other 69 of the day to land all by himself in the second notch at 142. Ben Hogan and Sam Parks, Jr., were dead-locked at 143. Ralph Guldahl, Vic Ghezzi, Dutch Harrison and Leonard Dodson were a quartet at 144.

Among this select group, if matters run true to form, will be found the winner when the final, back-breaking 36 holes have been played tomorrow. Sixty-six players who shot 153 or better for the first two rounds qualified for the finish, but it is extremely doubtful that any of those over 144 tonight will catch the leaders.

Little's name was on many lips today. The big fellow, who won two American and British amateur championships a few years ago, said he had "that old feeling" again.

Smith Blows Chance

Smith, one of the last of the stars to come in, had an excellent chance to take the leadership alone. He needed only par scores on the last three holes to finish ahead of Snead and Little by a stroke, but he tightened and took a 4 on the short 17th, the same hole that blasted Snead's hope of finishing ahead for the second straight day.

Demaret, pride of the Winter circuit, and Heafner, the long-hitter from Linville, N. C., each tore up their cards and withdrew in disgust.

The storm, though of only about 40 minutes duration, undoubtedly upset Snead. It struck him while he was playing the fourth hole and he began spraying his drives all over the landscape.

He had 39 strokes for the first nine and undoubtedly would have done worse if his wild approach to the ninth had not struck a spectator in the back and dropped dead. Some estimated that Sam would have taken about an eight on the hole if his ball had been permitted to roll on under the automobiles around the club house.

Washington Downs Chicago

WASHINGTON, June 7, (AP)—Dutch Leonard, Washington's knuckle-ball specialist, held the Chicago White Sox to nine hits today as the Nationals registered a 3-2 triumph.

Cecil Travis' triple in the seventh inning led to the run which sent Washington ahead, 2-1 ,when Jimmy Bloodworth singled to score him.

Washington boosted its lead off Jack Knott to 3-1 in the eighth when George Case walked, moved to second on Buddy Lewis' sacrifice, to third on Johnny Welaj's infield out and scored on Gerald Walker's looping double to right.

Leonard survived a ninth inning rally by the Sox which produced one run.

Dodgers Whip Reds 4 to 2 in Eleven Innings

Take National League Lead and Hand Walters First Defeat

CINCINNATI, June 7 (AP) — The indescribable Brooklyn Dodgers got their vengeance on the Cincinnati Reds today with a 4 to 2 eleven inning victory that lifted Brooklyn into the National lead and snapped Bucky Walters unbroken string of pitching triumphs at nine.

It was here at Crosley Field on May 1 that the Reds stopped Brooklyn after the Dodgers had won their first nine games of the season. They batted Hugh Casey out of the box that day and made the Dodgers forget for the moment Tex Carleton's no-hitter of the day before.

Today the Dodgers built their new winning streak to six straight games and Hugh Casey received credit for the victory after relieving Tot Pressnell. They permitted Cincinnati only six hits while Walters was belted for nine, including Dolph Camilli's two-run homer that won the game in the eleventh.

It was a memorable contest for the 8,601 customers. Pressnell and Walters matched three scoreless innings at the start before Brooklyn scored two runs in the fourth on a homer by Joe Vosmik, a double by Camilli and a single by Manager Leo Durocher.

Harry Craft homered for Cincinnati in the fifth and the Reds tied the score in the sixth on a triple by Lonnie Frey and an infield out. That was when Casey came on duty and allowed two hits in finishing. One of them was a triple by Craft at the start of the ninth, but the Reds weren't able to get him home and in the tenth they loaded the bases again without scoring.

Walters meanwhile allowed only one hit from the fifth until the eleventh. Then Vosmik singled. Ernie Koy was sent in to run for him, and Camilli hit his sixth home run.

Cards Defeat New York 3-2

ST. LOUIS, June 7 (AP) — In their first game following the release of Manager Ray Blades the St. Louis Cardinals edged out the New York Giants 3 to 2 today for unlucky Hal Schumacher's sixth defeat.

Although the St. Louis sluggers were held to six hits, they put together four of them with a walk for all their runs in the first inning.

After that the Cardinals proceeded to make five double plays, one short of the Major League record, to keep the Giants in check although the New Yorkers got 10 hits off Lon Warneke and Curt Davis. Three of these hits and two walks accounted for the Giants' runs in the seventh. They had made only a total of six for Schumacher in the six games he has lost.

GOES TO DODGERS

Joe Gallagher

This ball player is wearing new livery these days. He is Joe Gallagher, late of the St. Louis Browns and now of the Brooklyn Dodgers. Gallagher was traded to the Dodgers for Roy Cullenbine, for whom Brooklyn paid a $25,000 bonus when he was declared a free agent by Commissioner Landis in the Detroit housecleaning.

Godoy Burlesque Doubted In Next Tilt with Louis

NEW YORK, June 7.—Joe Louis has some unfinished business to rub off his books. The only man who ever played squat tag with him is still alive to tell the tale.

What's more, the fellow tells the tale at every opportunity.

"Then I kiss him," relates Senor Arturo Godoy, "and then I squat down and invite him to hit me. But he can't do nothing."

How would you like to be haunted by a guy like that? To make matters worse, Godoy is a tango dancer and a powder-puff puncher. When Louis meets him again two weeks from now, Joseph's friends expect Joe to knock the witness's memory right out from among his brains in the shortest possible time. Why leave a fellow to go around at large telling jokes on you?

Godoy, you remember, went fifteen rounds with Louis last Winter and laughed at the great man with impunity. He took a few stiff blows to the head, but to do him justice, Godoy can soak up punishment, and he soaked up the best of Joe's grade C stuff and practically stood on his head to show how good he felt.

Mocking Won't Win Titles

He mocked the champion from start to finish. Now, you can't win the title by mocking the champion. The rules require something a little more constructive, such as a good punch on the whiskers. Godoy lost the fight decisively, running away nine-tenths of the evening and landing one clean blow to Louis's three. His object was to go the distance, which he did, thanks to the artful coaching of Armand Weill, the weskit.

But Godoy also put question squarely up to Louis: Can a great champion afford to let a rival make fun of him? And can he be a great fighter if the other guy gets away with it?

Joe was lame and lethargic in defense of his prestige against Godoy. Of course, he didn't know ahead of time what was coming, and Joe is a little slow on the uptake. The fight was over before he could adapt himself to circumstances. Being in a lazy mood, and realizing that the waltz was his on points, he just let it go at that.

All right, then, you'll excuse him once. But he can't afford another burlesque. If the champion and old John Blackburn, his trainer, cannot cook up some antidote between them, as well as a way to mash the kidder from Chile like a potato on the night of June 20, then Louis will be made to look very bad indeed.

I doubt whether Godoy will try the same stunts again. After all, he must have some sort of hankering for the title, and he won't win the title by stunting. But, broadly speaking, he will probably fight the same kind of fight—lunge in quickly under Louis's long guns, clinch, wrestle, and shoot inside punches for Joe's head and body. Those punches will never hurt Joe badly, the Godoy armament being what it is, but there is always a chance that they'll bewilder him, and anything can happen to a bewildered fighter.

That's the Godoy policy, outlined by Weskit Weill: go inside and mix it and you've got a chance. Stand off and trade, and you're done for.

Task Is Simplified

That being the case, however, it strikes me that the task of Louis and Blackburn, preparing for the fight, is simplified. They know what to plan for. There is only a limited number of schemes you can try against a hitter of Louis's speed and power, and I think Godoy and Weill have permanently tipped their hand.

The team of Bob Pastor and James J. Johnston slipped one over on Louis once, just as Godoy and Weill did. Pastor made a straight backward fight, running like a deer in reverse. Like Godoy's first fight, it was a sacrifice fight — hardly a chance of winning.

Well, Pastor got his second lick at Louis, and this time tried a slight cross-up. He stood his ground in the first round. Louis promptly bounced him to the canvas a couple of times, and Pastor, as soon as his head cleared, reverted to the old running tactics. This time he didn't run far enough.

Joe has a good record for return matches with good fighters—Schmeling and Pastor. You can call Godoy a good fighter, too, at least a man who knows his business. If Joseph keeps the record clean, he will part Godoy in the middle and close his book with another account balanced.

It saddens me to report that these auspices, so formidable, so clear, so impressive, do not affect Senor Godoy in the least. When last seen, he was thumbing his nose at a likeness of Louis, and a very good likeness, at that. Do you suppose he knows something we don't know?

Yankees Take Indians Over By 5-4 Score

Feller Is Beaten in Ninth When Champions Score Two Runs

NEW YORK, June 7. (AP)—The World Champion Yankees first embarrassed and then defeated the fiery fastballer, Bob Feller, today scoring two runs in the ninth inning to overtake the Cleveland Indians 5 to 4.

The Yankees startled a big week day crowd of 31,430, as well as the Indians, by stealing home against Feller in the second inning, and finally overwhelmed him with four singles in the fatal ninth.

The struggle was an exciting if erratic hurling duel matching Feller against Marvin Breuer and Bump Hadley of the Yanks, with the latter pair holding the Indians to six hits.

Cleveland's first hit was Hall Trosky's fourteenth home run in the second inning and three of the visitors' other blows were crowded into the third inning for three runs.

Meantime, Feller had his fast ball working well and received spectacular support. After giving up three runs in the first two frames, he steadied to hold the champs to two hits and one run until the ninth.

Feller's fault today, however, was wobbliness with men on base. In the second inning he was caught flat-footed as George Selkirk, who had doubled and reached third on a fly, raced home while Feller went through his complicated windup.

In the ninth Gordon singled and stole second, from there he scored the tying run on Babe Dahlgren's single. Then Frank Crosetti rapped a hit back of third and Red Rolfe, lifted a single to short center for the winning run.

Corriganville Wins Over Clary Club 8 to 4

The Corriganville softball team defeated Clary Club at Corriganville yesterday 8 to 4 in a game that was refreshing in that no arguments marred hostilities. Corriganville had 11 hits to 5 by the Claryclubbers. Joe Nestor pumped one out of the lot for the winners.

W. Blank and Dennison were the Clary Club battery with Fleegle pitching and B. Often catching for Corriganville.

Three-Year-Olds Will Race Today

NEW YORK, June 7 (AP) — The battle for the three-year old turf championship comes down to Belmont Park's mile and half course tomorrow with E. R. Bradley's Bimelech and Mrs. Ethel V. Mars' Gallahadion heading a field of seven in the seventy-second running of the $25,000 added Belmont Stakes.

If the weather remains as fair and the track as fast as today, Bimelech figures to parade postward the choice of an expected crowd of between 30,000 and 35,000. The Bradley colt has not lived up to pre-season expectations but he has shown he can run over a pasteboard track.

After finishing second back of Gallahadion in the Kentucky Derby, he came back to whip Mrs. Mars' horse in the Preakness and then trailed far back in the Withers Mile at Belmont, which was won by Mrs. Payne Whitney's Corydon, a rank outsider.

Corydon has been entered in tomorrow's race but this time he'll not be neglected in the wagering. The Greentree colt showed by coming from behind in the stretch that the mile and half of the Belmont should be to his liking. He'll have the improved century note as a running mate.

Completing the well-balanced field are, George D. Widener's Your Chance, a speed demon that has showed plenty of improving since trailing in the Preakness; the Millsdale stable's Andy K., a decided factor if he forgets to run out and Mrs. N. C. Phipps' Snow Ridge, kept on the sidelines since early season by the coughing epidemic that invaded trainer "Sunny Jim" Fitzsimmons' barns.

If all seven start, the race will have an estimated value of $47,680, not as rich as either the Derby or Preakness but a race that should help clear up the muddle three-year old division. Post time is about 3:45 p. m., Eastern standard time.

Blades Fired; Southworth To Pilot Cards

Team Picked as Cinch Contender, Dismal Failure

Deposed Pilot Hailed Last Year as Greatest Tactician

Successor Comes from St. Louis Farm at Rochester

ST. LOUIS, June 7 (AP) — Ray Blades, hailed as one of the greatest tacticians of baseball last year, was fired outright today as manager of the faltering St. Louis Cardinals.

He was replaced by Billy Southworth, successful manager of the Rochester club of the International League, in a sudden shakeup aimed at getting the Redbirds back into the National League race.

Picked by the experts as almost a "cinch" pennant winner this season, the club has been a dismal failure.

Strong in Minors

In making the announcement—not altogether unexpected — President Sam Breadon said Southworth would take charge of the team Monday.

Both Southworth and Blades are graduates of the Cardinals' vast chain store system and it will be Billy's second fling at piloting the Cards. He had his first chance in 1929 but was dropped back to Rochester in the middle of the season "to get some more managerial experience"and has been going strong ever since.

He won the pennant three years straight (1929-1930-31) at Rochester; lifted Columbus from fifth to second place in 1932; scouted for the Cards in 1933-34; came back the next year to win the pennant at Asheville, N. C.; managed Memphis from midway in the '36 season through 1938 and then succeeded Blades at Rochester when the latter was promoted to the Cardinals.

Off to Poor Start

Last year the Redbirds landed in second place after giving the champion Cincinnati Reds the scare of a lifetime.

But this season the club got off to a poor star, handicapped by injuries and failure of the pitching staff to perform up to expectations.

Taking the break in his fortunes in stride, Ray simply commented it was a bitter disappointment but that he realized there was "nothing else the club could do."

Breadon said there was no other place for Blades in the Cardinal organization at the present time.

Young Southpaw Hurls Tigers to Win over Boston

Hal Newhouser Holds League Leading Red Sox to Seven Hits

BOSTON, June 7 (AP)—Hal Newhouser, Detroit's native son southpaw, moved the Tigers to within two games of the American League's top place today by holding the Red Sox to seven hits for a 7-1 victory.

With the Yankees beating Bob Feller and the Cleveland Indians, the setback did not affect the Red Sox' fingernail hold on first place. Joe Cronin's sluggers were held scorless until the ninth.

Starter Bill Butland gave the Tigers five hits, four passes and five runs before retiring in favor of Charley Wagner, who performed effectively after a wobbly start in the sixth.

The Tigers' big fifth was the result of two passes, Charlie Gehringer's triple and Hank Greenberg's single.

Philadelphia, June 7. (AP) — Al Brancato, rookie third baseman, drove in all the Athletic's runs today as Philadelphia defeated St. Louis 3-2 behind the six-hit pitching of Nelson Potter.

In four trips to the plate, Brancato got a triple, double and single, his safety in the ninth scoring Dick Siebert with the winning tally. Siebert had singled, was sacrificed to second and then stole third.

Johnny Bernardino homered in the fourth with one on to account for the two St. Louis runs.

Wheeling Will Have Twilight Turf Races

Wheeling, W. Va., June 7—Twilight racing will come to the Wheeling district next week at the request of turf fans, officials of Wheeling Downs announced today.

Tuesdays and Wednesdays of the final two weeks of the current spring meeting will see the first race sent to the post at 4 o'clock, an hour and a half later than first post time now in vogue.

With the approval of the West Virginia Racing Commission, Wheeling Downs conducted a poll on the 4 o'clock starting time and fans voted overwhelmingly in favor of the later hour.

This starting time will give hundreds of Wheeling district turf followers an opportunity to witness the entire card.

The twilight sport will only be held on Tuesdays and Wednesday. The last three days of the final weeks will have the usual 2:30 p. m. post time in force.

FINAL ROUND DRAMA

CLEVELAND—From more than a thousand who filed entries with the United States Golf Association, sixty odd remain to battle it out for the Open Golf Championship over the hills and dales of the Canterbury Golf Club at Cleveland today.

Of that remnant roughly a dozen can be conceded chances to win. For the rest, the last two rounds are mostly a matter of playing out the string, and looking ahead to another year. For the handful who still carry a chance to win, these last two rounds are a stirring adventure.

A glance back over championships of other years, recalls more than a few occasions that carried their full share of sporting drama, the flush triumph or the dregs of defeat.

Sarazen Called the Turn

There comes back the recollection of the brilliant finish with which Gene Sarazen made good his own prophecy to win, as a youngster shortly past twenty, at Skokie in 1922.

The night before the championship, talking with Bob Jones, Johnny Farrell and other youngsters, Gene said, "I have a hunch I am going to win this one. I'll be pretty well up at the end of thirty-six holes. I'll probably skid a bit in the third round, but I'll come back and burn up the course in that last round."

He called the turn to the last detail. Starting the final round four strokes back of the leader, his closing 68 was too hot for the rest to handle, and he won by a stroke.

Still a Star at 50

Twenty years before Vardon had come over and won this championship. He was even then in the heydey of his career. Now at 50 he was back for the third time, to make another challenge. His game through the first three rounds was the same flawless performance that marked him as one of the greatest players the game has ever produced.

Through the first eleven holes on his last round, he was still the master artist. But as he drove from the tee of the long twelfth into the teeth of a brisk wind, he suddenly began to falter. The Old Boy with the Scythe was catching up with him at last.

From the second hole in the third round, through the eleventh hole of the fourth, he played twenty-eight consecutive holes in 108 strokes, four better than an average of 4's. With seven holes to go, he had a clear margin of three strokes. But calamity was riding that wind.

On the next six holes, he required no less than 31 strokes, and he lost by a single stroke. It was his last serious bid for an important championship either here or abroad.

Scarcely less tragic was the experience that befell Roland Hancock at Olympia Fields in 1928. An unknown youngster from North Carolina, who had turned professional only a year or two before, Hancock went wholly unnoticed, until he had turned for home on his last round.

Bob Jones had just made a fine finish, after staggering badly through a stretch of six holes, to drop into a tie with Johnny Farrell, when the news began to spread that Hancock had covered the first nine holes in 33, and was leading the field. The mob caught him at the twelfth green. From there on through the sixteenth, he was harried on every side by the crowd, but he stuck gamely to his guns, matching par stroke for stroke.

A Disastrous Delay

An extra long delay was necessary to clear the field for play at the seventeenth tee, and the pressure on him aggravated by this delay took its toll. He sliced his drive to the rough, flubbed his second, put his third over the green and took a 6. A hooked drive at the home hole, left his line to the green stymied by a thick clump of lilacs. The best he could do was a 5 and he missed a tie with Jones and Farrell by a stroke.

Sam Snead's harrowing experience on the last hole at the Philadelphia Country Club last year is too recent to require recital here. A 5 would have won for him, but the best he could do was an 8.

But not all of the drama of these Open championships takes the form of tragedy. There was the sturdy march of squat, swarthy, smiling Tony Manero to the heights in 1936.

Tony had squeezed into the fight by holing a chip shot on the last hole of his qualifying round. He took to the tee in his last round four strokes back of Harry Cooper, the leader with at least six others no less favorably placed than himself.

Cooper, an early starter, played fine golf in protecting his lead, and looked all over the winner, when he came in with a four-round total of 284, two strokes better than the best previous record. Vic Ghezzi, Denny Shute and Henry Picard, closest in pursuit, each came to grief.

Paired with Gene Sarazen, an ideal playing partner, Tony suddenly came onto the top of his game at the right time. His drive split the middle, his irons were bulls-eyes and his putting blade held pure magic. He finished with a brilliant 67 to win by two strokes.

Guldahl's Great Finish

Ralph Guldahl put on a resolute finish to nip Snead at the wire at Oakland Hills the following year to succeed Manero as king of the clan. Playing his first championship Snead had made a brilliant showing with 283 on the long, slogging Detroit layout.

As a mighty shout echoed across the course, signaling his finish, Guldahl was facing a 40-foot putt on the eighth green. He knocked it in for a birdie, and then canned one half that long for a second birdie at the short ninth.

Trouble tagged him at the tenth and eleventh and threatened for a time to belt him out. But he rallied with a great 4 on the par 5 twelfth, knocked in a deuce at the thirteenth, and from then on he never wavered.

That last round tells the story, and you can count on this Canterbury tilt to add its quota to the thrills the old Scotch game has furnished for the world of sport through the years.

Indiana Negro Sets New Discus Record

MILWAUKEE, June 7 (AP)—Archie Harris, husky Indiana university negro set a new discus record in the fifteen annual central collegiate track and field meet today as Marquette university, defending team champion, took a slim lead in the preliminary competition.

The finals of the meet are set for tonight.

Harris, Big Ten champion, tossed the plate 163 feet, 8¾ inches, breaking the mark of 162 feet, 9½ inches set a year ago by William Faymonville of Notre Dame. Few other marks were even close to the records established in the fifteen-year history of the meet.

Marquette, seeking its fourth central championship, qualified seven men for nine places in the afternoon's ten preliminaries.

The defending champion competed in the preliminaries without their captain and dash star—Charles Beaudry, out with an injured leg muscle.

Notre Dame, five time winner of the meet, placed six in the finals. Wisconsin, Oklahoma and Minnesota sent five men each into the finals and Indians saved four men.

Cubs Rally To Defeat Boston

CHICAGO, June 7 (AP) — Jimmy Gleeson's single and doubles by Billy Herman and Bob Collins broke up a 3-3 tie in the eighth inning today and gave Chicago's Cubs a 5 to 3 decision over the Boston Bees.

Claude Passeau went the route for the Cubs, allowing eight hits in achieving his fourth triumph against six setbacks.

Outfielder Billy Nicholson's third home run in two days, with Phil Cavarretta on base, gave Chicago a 2-1 lead in the sixth, but two errors by Shortstop Bobby Mattick helped Boston tie the score in the seventh. After Dominic Dallessandro's triple put the Cubs ahead again in their half, Chet Ross' homer once more evened the count.

A couple of three-game winning streaks will collide at Community Park, Frostburg, this afternoon at 3 o'clock when the strong Frostburg American Legion and Keyser Moose tossers meet in the feature game of the day's Bi-State League program.

In other contests today Cumberland's Colts, tied with Westvaco A. A. for third place in the standing, go to Hyndman to meet Manageer Fred Clapper's outfit and Westvaco meets the Midland Red Sox at Memorial Park, Westernport. All three games are carded for 3 o'clock.

New Players Signed

Eight new players, including Willard "Buddy" Henderson, varsity infielder at Virginia Poly this spring, signed by Cumberland, are eligible for games this week-end.

Westvaco has added three collegians, Wendell "Rabbit" Wear, former Penn State star, and Johnny Bennett and Charlie Strauss, outstanding performers of Coach Ira Rodgers' West Virginia University team this spring. Wear is a shortstop, Bennett a pitcher, and Strauss a combination catcher-outfielder.

Midland submitted a contract for Alfred Lauber of Altoona, Pa., and released Adrian Phillips of Thomas, W. Va., and Adam Putlovis of Coketon, W. Va.

Keyser, is aided by the addition of William Shobe, a pitcher; Eldwood Goodman, outfielder, and William Garrett, a catcher.

Shobe, a youthful righthander, pitched good ball for the Keyser Reds a couple years ago and is expected to make the Bi-State grade. Goodman, who has been playing in the Elkins section but who now lives in Keyser, is a good hitter and fast fielder. Garrett has moved to Keyser from Weston, W. Va., where he played for that city in the fast independent league operating in Central West Virginia.

Blades Fired; Southworth To Pilot Cards

Successor Comes from St. Louis Farm at Rochester

ST. LOUIS, June 7 (AP) — Ray Blades, hailed as one of the greatest tacticians of baseball last year, was fired outright today as manager of the faltering St. Louis Cardinals.

He was replaced by Billy Southworth, successful manager of the Rochester club of the International League, in a sudden shakeup aimed at getting the Redbirds back into the National League race.

Picked by the experts as almost a "cinch" pennant winner this season, the club has been a dismal failure.

Strong in Minors

In making the announcement—not altogether unexpected — President Sam Breadon said Southworth would take charge of the team Monday.

Both Southworth and Blades are graduates of the Cardinals' vast chain store system and it will be Billy's second fling at piloting the Cards. He had his first chance in 1929 but was dropped back to Rochester in the middle of the season "to get some more managerial experience"and has been going strong ever since.

He won the pennant three years straight (1929-1930-31) at Rochester; lifted Columbus from fifth to second place in 1932; scouted for the Cards in 1933-34; came back the next year to win the pennant at Asheville, N. C.; managed Memphis from midway in the '36 season through 1938 and then succeeded Blades at Rochester when the latter was promoted to the Cardinals.

Off to Poor Start

Last year the Redbirds landed in second place after giving the champion Cincinnati Reds the scare of a lifetime.

But this season the club got off to a poor star, handicapped by injuries and failure of the pitching staff to perform up to expectations.

Taking the break in his fortunes in stride, Ray simply commented it was a bitter disappointment but that he realized there was "nothing else the club could do."

Breadon said there was no other place for Blades in the Cardinal organization at the present time.

Young Southpaw Hurls Tigers to Win over Boston

Hal Newhouser Holds League Leading Red Sox to Seven Hits

BOSTON, June 7 (AP)—Hal Newhouser, Detroit's native son southpaw, moved the Tigers to within two games of the American League's top place today by holding the Red Sox to seven hits for a 7-1 victory.

With the Yankees beating Bob Feller and the Cleveland Indians, the setback did not affect the Red Sox' fingernail hold on first place. Joe Cronin's sluggers were held scorless until the ninth.

Starter Bill Butland gave the Tigers five hits, four passes and five runs before retiring in favor of Charley Wagner, who performed effectively after a wobbly start in the sixth.

The Tigers' big fifth was the result of two passes, Charlie Gehringer's triple and Hank Greenberg's single.

Athletics Rookie Beats Browns 3-2

Philadelphia, June 7. (AP) — Al Brancato, rookie third baseman, drove in all the Athletic's runs today as Philadelphia defeated St. Louis 3-2 behind the six-hit pitching of Nelson Potter.

In four trips to the plate, Brancato got a triple, double and single, his safety in the ninth scoring Jack Siebert with the winning tally. Siebert had singled, was sacrificed to second and then stole third.

Johnny Bernardino homered in the fourth with one on to account for the two St. Louis runs.

Keeling Will Have Twilight Turf Races

Keeling, W. Va., June 7—Twilight racing will come to the Wheeling district next week at the request of turf fans, officials of the Wheeling Downs announced today. Mondays and Wednesdays of the next two weeks of the current meeting will see the first event to the post at 4 o'clock, one hour and a half later than daylight time now in vogue.

With the approval of the West Virginia Racing Commission, Wheeling Downs conducted a poll for 4 o'clock starting time and voted overwhelmingly in favor of the later hour.

The starting time will give hundreds of Wheeling district turf followers an opportunity to witness the entire card.

The twilight sport will only be held Tuesdays and Wednesday. During the three days of the final week it will have the usual 2:30 p. m. post time in force.

FINAL ROUND DRAMA

CLEVELAND—From more than a thousand who filed entries with the United States Golf Association, sixty odd remain to battle it out for the Open Golf Championship over the hills and dales of the Canterbury Golf Club at Cleveland today.

Of that remnant roughly a dozen can be conceded chances to win. For the rest, the last two rounds are mostly a matter of playing out the string, and looking ahead to another year. For the handful who still carry a chance to win, these last two rounds are a stirring adventure.

A glance back over championships of other years, recalls more than a few occasions that carried their full share of sporting drama, the flush triumph or the dregs of defeat.

Sarazen Called the Turn

There comes back the recollection of the brilliant finish with which Gene Sarazen made good his own prophecy to win, as a youngster shortly past twenty, at Skokie in 1922.

The night before the championship, talking with Bob Jones, Johnny Farrell and other youngsters, Gene said, "I have a hunch I am going to win this one. I'll be pretty well up at the end of thirty-six holes. I'll probably skid a bit in the third round, but I'll come back and burn up the course in that last round."

He called the turn to the last detail. Starting the final round four strokes back of the leader, his closing 68 was too hot for the rest to handle, and he won by a stroke.

Moving back even a couple of years earlier, the tragedy of Harry Vardon still stands as one of the harshests turns of the closing stages of these championships.

Still a Star at 50

Twenty years before Vardon had come over and won this championship. He was even then in the heydey of his career. Now at 50 he was back for the third time, to make another challenge. His game through the first three rounds was the same flawless performance that marked him as one of the greatest players the game has ever produced.

Through the first eleven holes on his last round, he was still the master artist. But as he drove from the tee of the long twelfth into the teeth of a brisk wind, he suddenly began to falter. The Old Boy with the Scythe was catching up with him at last.

From the second hole in the third round, through the eleventh hole of the fourth, he played twenty-eight consecutive holes in 108 strokes, four better than an average of 4's. With seven holes to go, he had a clear margin of three strokes. But calamity was riding that wind.

On the next six holes, he required no less than 31 strokes, and he lost by a single stroke. It was his last serious bid for an important championship either here or abroad.

Scarcely less tragic was the experience that befell Roland Hancock at Olympia Fields in 1928. An unknown youngster from North Carolina, who had turned professional only a year or two before, Hancock went wholly unnoticed, until he had turned for home on his last round.

Bob Jones had just made a fine finish, after staggering badly through a stretch of six holes, to drop into a tie with Johnny Farrell, when the news began to spread that Hancock had covered the first nine holes in 33, and was leading the field. The mob caught him at the twelfth green. From there on through the sixteenth, he was harried on every side by the crowd, but he stuck gamely to his guns, matching par stroke for stroke.

A Disastrous Delay

An extra long delay was necessary to clear the field for play at the seventeenth tee, and the pressure on him aggravated by this delay took its toll. He sliced his drive to the rough, flubbed his second, put his third over the green and took a 6. A hooked drive at the home hole, left his line to the green stymied by a thick clump of lilacs. The best he could do was a 5 and he missed a tie with Jones and Farrell by a stroke.

Sam Snead's harrowing experience on the last hole at the Philadelphia Country Club last year is too recent to require recital here. A 5 would have won for him, but the best he could do was an 8.

But not all of the drama of these Open championships takes the form of tragedy. There was the sturdy march of squat, swarthy, smiling Tony Manero to the heights in 1936.

Tony had squeezed into the fight by holing a chip shot on the last hole of his qualifying round. He took to the tee in his last round four strokes back of Harry Cooper, the leader with at least six others no less favorably placed than himself.

Cooper, an early starter, played fine golf in protecting his lead, and looked all over the winner, when he came in with a four-round total of 284, two strokes better than the best previous record. Vic Ghezzi, Denny Shute and Henry Picard, closest in pursuit, each came to grief.

Paired with Gene Sarazen, an ideal playing partner, Tony suddenly came onto the top of his game at the right time. His drive split the middle, his irons were bulls-eyes and his putting blade held pure magic. He finished with a brilliant 67 to win by two strokes.

Guldahl's Great Finish

Ralph Guldahl put on a resolute finish to nip Snead at the wire at Oakland Hills the following year to succeed Manero as king of the clan. Playing his first championship Snead had made a brilliant showing with 283 on the long, slogging Detroit layout.

As a mighty shout echoed across the course, signaling his finish, Guldahl was facing a 40-foot putt on the eighth green. He knocked it in for a birdie, and then canned one half that long for a second birdie at the short ninth.

Trouble tagged him at the tenth and eleventh and threatened for a time to belt him out. But he rallied with a great 4 on the par 5 twelfth, knocked in a deuce at the thirteenth, and from then on he never wavered.

That last round tells the story, and you can count on this Canterbury tilt to add its quota to the thrills the old Scotch game has furnished for the world of sport through the years.

Indiana Negro Sets New Discus Record

MILWAUKEE, June 7 (AP)—Archie Harris, husky Indiana university negro set a new discus record in the fifteen annual central collegiate track and field meet today as Marquette university, defending team champion, took a slim lead in the preliminary competition.

The finals of the meet are set for tonight.

Harris, Big Ten champion, tossed the plate 163 feet, 8¾ inches, breaking the mark of 162 feet, 9½ inches set a year ago by William Faymonville of Notre Dame. Few other marks were even close to the records established in the fifteen-year history of the meet.

Marquette, seeking its fourth central championship, qualified seven men for nine places in the afternoon's ten preliminaries.

The defending champion competed in the preliminaries without their captain and dash star—Charles Beaudry, out with an injured leg muscle.

Notre Dame, five time winner of the meet, placed six in the finals. Wisconsin, Oklahoma and Minnesota sent five men each into the finals and Indians saved four men.

Cubs Rally To Defeat Boston

CHICAGO, June 7 (AP) — Jimmy Gleeson's single and doubles by Billy Herman and Bob Collins broke up a 3-3 tie in the eighth inning today and gave Chicago's Cubs a 5 to 3 decision over the Boston Bees.

Claude Passeau went the route for the Cubs, allowing eight hits in achieving his fourth triumph against six setbacks.

Outfielder Billy Nicholson's third home run in two days, with Phil Cavarretta on base, gave Chicago a 2-1 lead in the sixth, but two errors by Shortstop Bobby Mattick helped Boston tie the score in the seventh. After Dominic Dallessandro's triple put the Cubs ahead again in their half, Chet Ross' homer once more evened the count.

A couple of three-game winning streaks will collide at Community Park, Frostburg, this afternoon at 3 o'clock when the strong Frostburg American Legion and Keyser Moose tossers meet in the feature game of the day's Bi-State League program.

In other contests today Cumberland's Colts, tied with Westvaco A. A. for third place in the standing, go to Hyndman to meet Manageer Fred Clapper's outfit and Westvaco meets the Midland Red Sox at Memorial Park, Westernport. All three games are carded for 3 o'clock.

New Players Signed

Eight new players, including Willard "Buddy" Henderson, varsity infielder at Virginia Poly this spring, signed by Cumberland, are eligible for games this week-end.

Westvaco has added three collegians, Wendell "Rabbit" Wear, former Penn State star, and Johnny Bennett and Charlie Strauss, outstanding performers of Coach Ira Rodgers' West Virginia University team this spring. Wear is a shortstop, Bennett a pitcher, and Strauss a combination catcher-outfielder.

Midland submitted a contract for Alfred Lauber of Altoona, Pa., and released Adrian Phillips of Thomas, W. Va., and Adam Putlovis of Coketon, W. Va.

Keyser, is aided by the addition of William Shobe, a pitcher; Eldwood Goodman, outfielder, and William Garrett, a catcher.

Shobe, a youthful righthander, pitched good ball for the Keyser Reds a couple years ago and is expected to make the Bi-State grade. Goodman, who has been playing in the Elkins section but who now lives in Keyser, is a good hitter and fast fielder. Garrett has moved to Keyser from Weston, W. Va., where he played for that city in the fast independent league operating in Central West Virginia.

Byron Urges Re-Arming, But Only for Defense

Congressman William D. Byron, speaking on national defense last night over radio station WTBO, declared, "We must act—act promptly and wisely — and I pray that our action will serve to keep lighted the lamps of freedom and democracy in America."

Significantly enough, Congressman Byron, a veteran of the last war and a member of the important Military Affairs committee of the House of Representatives, did not urge American participation in the European war as part of his call to action.

For America's Defense Only

Instead, he said plainly enough, "My hopes and prayers are for peace, and I view this program of preparedness as essential to our own national defense and for that purpose alone.

Rep. Byron said he has "no fear of any immediate invasion of America by foreign foe", but gave his pledge not to "relax for one minute in my efforts to prepare this democracy against the evil day when merciless men, greedy with power, may seek to extend their aggression to this continent."

No Patience with Alarmists

Rep. Byron spoke confidently, saying he had no patience "with scatter-brained alarmists or uninformed sword rattlers."

"Those of us who studied the history of this country's defenses and appraised its resources," he continued, "are confident that the capacity and ingenuity of our people is sufficient to meet any test."

It was more than "indifference or lethergy" that caused America to lose interest in its army and navy after the World war, Rep. Byron said. "It was the normal reaction of a war-weary people. And we felt that a world sick of killing and destruction would not soon want to return to the amphitheater of war."

Defensive Power Greatly Improved

Rep. Byron declared, however, that "anyone who asserts that the money appropriated during the past six years for national defense has been wasted is either not in possesison of the facts or is engaging in deliberate misrepresentation.

"The truth is, in recent years the defensive power of our army, navy and marine corps has been greatly improved. Of course, much remains to be done and it can be done and it will be done."

The modern equipment, including the planes necessary for the new American army can be obtained within eighteen to twenty-four months after the funds are made available, Rep. Byron said. This time can be shortened, he said, "if emergencies dictate quicker action."

No Secrets Given Away

Rep. Byron said foreign orders for military planes have helped rather than hindered the American defense program by causing an extension of production facilities.

He branded as "sheer nonsense" the talk that military secrets have been given to foreign countries through the sale of equipment to them.

"As a flyer in the last war," he said, "I have the opinion that our planes are the equal if not better than those of any other power."

Attacks Politics in Defense

He urged his listeners "to spurn and reject those who would make partisan issues of the necessity for national defense." Safeguarding our liberties and our homes, he said, remains the duty and responsibility of all Americans regardless of party.

He branded as America's fifth column "those who undertake to make cheap political capital out of the program of national defense."

In conclusion, Rep. Byron said that "while the talk of planes and armies and preparedness may seem exciting to some, I cannot find it in my heart to be other than saddened by the necessities of the hour."

Army Recruits Go to Hawaii

Thirteen men from the Cumberland area enlisted in the U. S. Army here this week, Sergt. Clarence Biehm, announced yesterday.

New Map of City To Go on Sale

A new map of Cumberland including a mileage chart has been completed by R. H. DeGrange, former draftsman connected with the U. S. Army, who recently completed Allegany county's first up-to-date map in years.

Five hundred copies of the map have been printed for sale, DeGrange said. Approximately 200 of the county maps have been sold in this vicinity so far, he reported.

Piedmont Delegation Wants Bridge Fixed

A committee from the Piedmont Rotary Club called on the county commissioners yesterday at the Court House in regard to needed repairs on the Luke-Piedmont bridge.

The commissioners informed the committee members that plans to repair the inter-state bridge were already underway in cooperation with the State Roads Commission of West Virginia. Plans for the project are now being drawn up and work on the bridge is expected to start soon.

The members of the committee who conferred with the commissioners were Raymond Hudson, Lewis Engle, J. C. Rhodes, and Henry O. Failing.

$7,000 Collected

Seven thousand dollars in county taxes was collected yesterday at the office of County Tax Collector Alban Thompson to swell the total to approximately $80,000.

Lightning Strikes Refrigerator, Street Lights Off on West Side

Lightning struck a Cumberland home and a Rawlings farmhouse during storms yesterday as the summer's first heat wave sent the temperature over the 90 degree mark for the fifth straight day.

Mrs. Margaret E. Fleckenstein, wife of Hubert W. Fleckenstein, of 221 Carroll street, had a narrow escape during yesterday afternoon's thunderstorm when lightning struck wires into the kitchen of her home and set the motor of the electric refrigerator on fire.

"Streak of Fire"

"I had just stepped into the living room from the kitchen when I saw a streak of fire shoot across the doorway and enter the ice box," Mrs. Fleckenstein said. "The box caught on fire and I called the firemen."

West Side Firemen answered the call at 1:30 p. m. and extinguished the blaze with little damage done. Mrs. Fleckenstein said her two children were playing on the back porch when the lightning struck.

Employes of the Potomac Edison Company reported that the farmhome of R. C. Wilson, at Rawlings, was struck by lightning last night. A bolt crashed through a side of the building, it was reported. No one was injured.

Street Lights Off

All street lights on the West Side were out last night from 8 to 9:30 p. m. while the second sharp thunderstorm of the day was in progress.

Yesterday marked the fifth consecutive day this week that the thermometer on the City Hall roof topped the 90 degree mark.

Temperatures for the week were: Sunday, 81; Monday, 91; Tuesday, 94; Wednesday, 91; Thursday, 94; and yesterday, 93½.

A thunderstorm early yesterday afternoon helped to cut the heat for a short time, but did not prevent the temperature from climbing again late in the afternoon.

Yesterday's sultry weather was generally conceded the most oppressive this week.

Showers were predicted for the Cumberland area this weekend.

History of Nine Flags Which Will Be Flown

The nine flags to be displayed during the Flag Day ceremonies tomorrow at Constitution Park date back to 1497 when John Cabot, the explorer, planted the Red Cross of England in America during the reign of King Henry VII.

Highlights in the evolution of the flag have been set forth as follows:

1606—English flag changed from white to blue field and the white cross of St. Andrew placed thereon when James I was king of England. This banner was called the union of the King's colors.

1607—Color of the flag was changed from blue to crimson and two crosses placed in blue field in upper corner. Colonies recognized change and placed a pine tree in the white field in lieu of crosses.

1775—The pine tree flag was adopted for all vessels and the banner was carried in the Battle of Bunker Hill.

In the latter part of 1775 a committee appointed by the Continental Congress designed a flag of thirteen stripes alternate red and white and on the upper corner in an azure field red and white crosses of St. George and St. Andrew. John Paul Jones hoisted this flag to the masthead of the Flagship "Albert" December 3, 1775. One month later General George Washington raised it over his headquarters at Cambridge, Mass.

Dissatisfaction over the above flag because of its likeness to the English banner produced the seventh flag. On July 14, 1777, Congress adopted a flag of thirteen stars and thirteen stripes.

1795—Two additional stripes and two stars were added for Vermont and Kentucky. This is the flag that flew over Fort McHenry, September 14, 1814 inspiring Francis Scott Key to write the "Star Spangled Banner."

Admission of additional states made it too cumberson to add stripes, so on July 4, 1818, Congress adopted flag of thirteen stripes and one star for each state in the union. There were twenty states in the union at that time. This was the first official flag of the United States.

Byron Urges Re-Arming, But Only for Defense

Congressman William D. Byron, speaking on national defense last night over radio station WTBO, declared, "We must act—act promptly and wisely — and I pray that our action will serve to keep lighted the lamps of freedom and democracy in America."

Significantly enough, Congressman Byron, a veteran of the last war and a member of the important Military Affairs committee of the House of Representatives, did not urge American participation in the European war as part of his call to action.

For America's Defense Only

Instead, he said plainly enough, "My hopes and prayers are for peace, and I view this program of preparedness as essential to our own national defense and for that purpose alone.

Rep. Byron said he has "no fear of any immediate invasion of America by foreign foe", but gave his pledge not to "relax for one minute in my efforts to prepare this democracy against the evil day when merciless men, greedy with power, may seek to extend their aggression to this continent."

No Patience with Alarmists

Rep. Byron spoke confidently, saying he had no patience "with scatter-brained alarmists or uninformed sword rattlers."

"Those of us who studied the history of this country's defenses and appraised its resources," he continued, "are confident that the capacity and ingenuity of our people is sufficient to meet any test."

It was more than "indifference or lethergy" that caused America to lose interest in its army and navy after the World war, Rep. Byron said. "It was the normal reaction of a war-weary people. And we felt that a world sick of killing and destruction would not soon want to return to the amphitheater of war."

Defensive Power Greatly Improved

Rep. Byron declared, however, that "anyone who asserts that the money appropriated during the past six years for national defense has been wasted is either not in possession of the facts or is engaging in deliberate misrepresentation.

"The truth is, in recent years the defensive power of our army, navy and marine corps has been greatly improved. Of course, much remains to be done and it can be done and it will be done."

The modern equipment, including the planes necessary for the new American army can be obtained within eighteen to twenty-four months after the funds are made available, Rep. Byron said. This time can be shortened, he said, "if emergencies dictate quicker action."

No Secrets Given Away

Rep. Byron said foreign orders for military planes have helped rather than hindered the American defense program by causing an extension of production facilities.

He branded as "sheer nonsense" the talk that military secrets have been given to foreign countries through the sale of equipment to them.

"As a flyer in the last war," he said, "I have the opinion that our planes are the equal if not better than those of any other power."

Attacks Politics in Defense

He urged his listeners "to spurn and reject those who would make partisan issues of the necessity for national defense." Safeguarding our liberties and our homes, he said, remains the duty and responsibility of all Americans regardless of party.

He branded as America's fifth column "those who undertake to make cheap political capital out of the program of national defense."

In conclusion, Rep. Byron said that "while the talk of planes and armies and preparedness may seem exciting to some, I cannot find it in my heart to be other than saddened by the necessities of the hour."

The nine flags to be shown at Constitution Park are the property of the Johnstown Elks Lodge and were borrowed for the ceremonies here.

Another feature on the program will be the Floral Bell of Liberty ritual in which four officers of the lodge will take part. The red, white and blue bell of artificial roses, lilies and violets will be put together by John Mosner, exalted ruler; Alfred Howe, esteemed leading knight; Lester Deneen, esteemed loyal knight; ;and George Lyming, lecturing knight.

Roses, forming the base of the bell, indicate courage, loyalty and devotion. Lilies, on the second tier, stand for charity, purity and truth and violets on the top of the bell indicate justice, brotherly love and fidelity. Atop the bell resting on a bar will be three stars, indicating the light of the first American stars.

Patriotic airs will be provided by the band of Fort Cumberland Post No. 13, American Legion.

Flag Day ceremonies were adopted by the Elks as a mandatory service of the order twenty years ago and are observed annually by all lodges of the order.

The committee in charge of arrangements for tomorrow's program is composed of Charles M. Stump, chairman, Alvin Bergeron, Thomas E. Kearney, John J. Long, John J. Treiber, Jr., Harry I. Stegmaier and Elmo F. Gower.

History of Nine Flags Which Will Be Flown

The nine flags to be displayed during the Flag Day ceremonies tomorrow at Constitution Park date back to 1497 when John Cabot, the explorer, planted the Red Cross of England in America during the reign of King Henry VII.

Highlights in the evolution of the flag have been set forth as follows:

1606—English flag changed from white to blue field and the white cross of St. Andrew placed thereon when James I was king of England. This banner was called the union of the King's colors.

1607—Color of the flag was changed from blue to crimson and two crosses placed in blue field in upper corner. Colonies recognized change and placed a pine tree in the white field in lieu of crosses.

1775—The pine tree flag was adopted for all vessels and the banner was carried in the Battle of Bunker Hill.

1776-77 — Southern colonies used the snake flag with the inscription "Don't Tread on Me."

In the latter part of 1775 a committee appointed by the Continental Congress designed a flag of thirteen stripes alternate red and white and on the upper corner in an azure field red and white crosses of St. George and St. Andrew. John Paul Jones hoisted this flag to the masthead of the Flagship "Albert" December 3, 1775. One month later General George Washington raised it over his headquarters at Cambridge, Mass.

Dissatisfaction over the above flag because of its likeness to the English banner produced the seventh flag. On July 14, 1777, Congress adopted a flag of thirteen stars and thirteen stripes.

1795—Two additional stripes and two stars were added for Vermont and Kentucky. This is the flag that flew over Fort McHenry, September 14, 1814 inspiring Francis Scott Key to write the "Star Spangled Banner."

Admission of additional states made it too cumberson to add stripes, so on July 4, 1818, Congress adopted flag of thirteen stripes and one star for each state in the union. There were twenty states in the union at that time. This was the first official flag of the United States.

Broadstock, of Cumberland, were charged with violating Section One of the city picketing ordinance, which states that no person or persons shall boycott, molest of interfere with any other person having lawful business at a public place or building by standing, sitting, congregating, or obstructing the entrance.

Store Being Picketed

The men were arrested by Officers Frank A. Shober Jr. in an alley at the rear of the store after they failed to move on at his order. The teamsters have been picketing the Bernstein store for a number of weeks.

According to Assistant Chief of Police John J. Treiber, Stutzman and Broadstock went to the alley at the rear of the store while a truck was being unloaded. An argument started, Trieber said.

Stutzman was fined $20 in Trial Magistrate's Court April 5 on a charge of conspiracy to assault. Stutzman was tried with three other AFofL men in the beating of Robert G. Nazelrod, 48, of 206 Charles street, a member of the CIO construction union who worked on the Bernstein remodeling job.

Lightning Strikes Refrigerator, Street Lights Off on West Side

Lightning struck a Cumberland home and a Rawlings farmhouse during storms yesterday as the summer's first heat wave sent the temperature over the 90 degree mark for the fifth straight day.

Mrs. Margaret E. Fleckenstein, wife of Hubert W. Fleckenstein, of 221 Carroll street, had a narrow escape during yesterday afternoon's thunderstorm when lightning struck wires into the kitchen of her home and set the motor of the electric refrigerator on fire.

"Streak of Fire"

"I had just stepped into the living room from the kitchen when I saw a streak of fire shoot across the doorway and enter the ice box," Mrs. Fleckenstein said. "The box caught on fire and I called the firemen."

West Side Firemen answered the call at 1:30 p. m. and extinguished the blaze with little damage done. Mrs. Fleckenstein said her two children were playing on the back porch when the lightning struck.

Employes of the Potomac Edison Company reported that the farmhome of R. C. Wilson, at Rawlings, was struck by lightning last night. A bolt crashed through a side of the building, it was reported. No one was injured.

Street Lights Off

All street lights on the West Side were out last night from 8 to 9:30 p. m. while the second sharp thunderstorm of the day was in progress.

Yesterday marked the fifth consecutive day this week that the thermometer on the City Hall roof topped the 90 degree mark.

Temperatures for the week were: Sunday, 81; Monday, 91; Tuesday, 94; Wednesday, 91; Thursday, 94; and yesterday, 93½.

A thunderstorm early yesterday afternoon helped to cut the heat for a short time, but did not prevent the temperature from climbing again late in the afternoon.

Yesterday's sultry weather was generally conceded the most oppressive this week.

A second thunderstorm last night cooled off the air. The temperature was 72 degrees at midnight.

Showers were predicted for the Cumberland area this weekend.
